Kitimat oil plan resurrected

Dissident Ayatollah Shariat-Madari smiles while Khomeini loyalists parade

VANCOUVER (CP) — The Kitimat oil port proposal, rejected by the B.C. and federal governments as environmentally dangerous, has been revived by a new company backed by a prominent British Columbia business executive.

J. V. Clyne, former chairman of MacMillan Bloedel, is one of the principals in Northern Pipeline Ltd., along with George Wilkinson, who worked on the original Kitimat project for Ashland Oil of Kentucky.

As well, Leslie Peterson and Ray Williston, former attorney-general and forests minister respectively in the Social Credit government of W. A. C. Bennett, have played an active part. Peterson's law firm has been engaged to handle legal matters and Williston "has done nothing but help," Wilkinson said.

He would not reveal who the new chairman of the board of directors will be other than to say he is a prominent Vancouver businessman.

Northern, which won't be registered as a B.C. company until next week, already has been lobbying for support for its application.

However, a spokesman for the National Energy Board said in Ottawa that no one has heard of the new proposal and he doubted the board would hear the application before U.S. President Carter is due to submit his pipeline recommendations to Congress late next month.

The new backers still plan to push the proposal and hope to persuade the B.C. government that Kitimat is a good location.

Clyne said Williston's research indicates Kitimat is environmentally preferable to Port Angeles, a leading candidate for a port for Alaskan crude.

"I think if we're going to have an oil spill anywhere at all on the B.C. coast, then it would be better to have it at Kitimat, where it can be contained," he said.

"A spill at Port Angeles would involve the whole Strait of Juan de Fuca, including Victoria."

(The freighter Star Opal is in drydock in Victoria after ripping out her bottom in Laredo channel south of Kitimat Nov. 6. Environmentalists claim the approach to Kitimat is dangerous due to rocks and shoals, and the lack of maneouvring space in the channels).

Clyne said he has had no contact with B.C. government officials on the proposal, but said there is a chance they will back it if Carter leaves the door open.

At present, three companies are proposing to move the Alaskan oil: Northern Tier, from Port Angeles through an all-U.S. line; Trans Mountain, from Low Point, Wash., to Edmonton and on to Chicago, and Foothills, from Fairbanks along the Alaska Highway to Edmonton and beyond.

Jim Fulton (NDP-Skeena) described the Kitimat proposal as "a distant, distant, third" in relation to the Trans Mountain and Foothills' proposals.

Considering the lack of support for the original proposal by the former Liberal government and the present Conservative administration, it's unlikely Northern Pipeline Ltd.'s proposal can expect support.

Fulton was also concerned about tankers having to navigate the "relatively shallow" waters off the Queen Charlottes.

Oil panic feared

TORONTO (CP) — Canadian officials of major oil companies say that while they believe oil shortages in Eastern Canada are imminent, they are afraid of causing panic among consumers.

To cope with the low supplies, refiners have quietly started to ration gasoline to private-brand service stations. Refinery tanks in the region are so low the companies are having trouble handling their existing contracts.

Prime Minister Joe Clark told the Commons Wednesday Canada could have oil shortages this winter because of a cutoff of Iranian oil.

The halt in Iranian oil sales to Gulf Canada Ltd., because it is a subsidiary of a U.S. firm, means their refinery at Point Tupper, N.S., will run out of oil in February or early March unless alternate supplies are found.

Clark told the House of Commons that Gulf hoped to find alternate supplies and he did not expect reduced supplies from other companies. But he added that the government was seeking other supplies and was establishing the machinery for rationing.

"The National Energy Board has now, as a result of increased consumption in Canada and some other activities, come to the conclusion that there may be limited shortages this winter in Canada," Clark said.

Clark said a board to oversee possible rationing will be appointed by the end of next week. Legislation permitting the emergency supplies board was approved last winter.

Khomeini stand softer

Times News Services

As critics of his regime seized a provincial city, Ayatollah Khomeini softened his stand on the hostage issue and President Carter said he was "tightening the screws" on Iran.

Tens of thousands of Iranian demonstrators seized the northwestern city of Tabriz today, posing a major domestic challenge to Khomeini in a move that could jeopardize the early release of the hostages in Tehran.

Dissident supporters of moderate religious leader Ayatollah Kazem Shariat-Madari first captured the radio and television stations in Tabriz, then fanned through the city of 2 million near the Turkish border. By nightfall it was effectively in their hands.

In radio broadcasts, the demonstrators said they had fired the province's governor, urged other towns to mobilize for revolution and claimed the backing of local police and army units.

The demonstrators were demanding changes in an Islamic constitution that would give Khomeini absolute power in Iran for life.

But they carefully pledged their continued support for Khomeini personally as well as for Shariat-Madari.

In Tehran, Khomeini today was quoted as saying the UN Security Council's call for a negotiated settlement of the U.S.-Iranian crisis is "a step forward."

Pars news agency said that Foreign Minister Sadegh Ghotbzadeh met Khomeini in the holy city of Qom and they "noticed that this is not a resolution condemning us."

While the two leaders were talking, supporters of Khomeini and the religious leader of the country's Turkish minority clashed in the holy city of Qom for the second straight day over the Islamic constitution that makes Khomeini supreme ruler for life, residents reported.

In Washington, President Carter said Wednesday night he would "turn the screws a little tighter" on Iran every few days to obtain the release of the hostages.

An apparent new turn of the screw is the administration's decision to dispatch key officials around the world in an effort to gain cooperation with U.S. moves aimed at freezing Iranian government assets deposited outside Iran.

The president stressed economic and diplomatic steps to win the freedom of the 50 hostages, although the administration has said it will not give up a military option.

In other developments:

— U.S. National Security Adviser Zbigniew Brzezinski said the student followers of Khomeini have been infiltrated by radical leftists.

— Former Iranian prime minister Shapur Bakhtiar was quoted today in Spain as saying he is organizing a political and military opposition to take power when Khomeini's regime falls, as "The number of Khomeini's real faithful is decreasing."

Still at large

RICHMOND (CP) — A convicted murderer being returned to prison after an escape last month was still at large today after escaping from a plane at Vancouver International Airport Wednesday.

A police spokesman said Anthony Gerein, 27, was being returned from California and was in the custody of United States immigration officials when the plane landed here.

Bennett tight-lipped on research firings

By JAKE BANKY

Premier Bill Bennett refused today to comment on the mass firing of the Social Credit caucus research staff.

"I don't make comments on caucus business," he said.

Asked if he, as a caucus member, concurred in the decision, Bennett replied, "All caucus decisions are kept within caucus."

Bennett referred reporters to a statement by caucus chairman Jack Kempf when asked if the firings stemmed from the dirty tricks affair.

"I've seen Mr. Kempf's statement and he said no," Bennett said.

Meanwhile, at least two former Socred caucus researchers intend to sue the Socreds for wrongful dismissal.

Vancouver lawyer Robert Gardner, representing Ellen Mackay and Jack Kelly, said Wednesday it is no longer a question of whether they'll sue, but when.

Kelly resigned as chief caucus researcher Oct. 10, shortly after the storm broke over the dirty tricks affair. Mackay is one of the four research staff members who suddenly found themselves jobless Tuesday after receiving terse notes of dismissal from Kempf.

Gardner said the timing of a wrongful dismissal suit against caucus will depend on the continuing RCMP investigation into dirty tricks.

"We want to get the criminal things cleared up before we get into the civil side," he said.

Police investigating the lettergate affair are to talk to Kelly and Mackay this week.

Gardner intervened Nov. 9 to prevent his clients talking to police, demanding that the attorney-general first guarantee there was no political interference with the investigation.

That assurance was given but so far the police have not been permitted to interview Mackay or Kelly.

Now Gardner says: "We are planning to talk to the police and give them the whole thing."

The police inquiry into the possibility that Socred political dirty tricks may have included criminal acts has been under way since Oct. 17. So far there is no indication when a report can be expected.

Also considering legal action is Bob Husband, one of the four researchers who got the axe.

He said Wednesday he has

Funds: 'Nothing strange'

Premier Bill Bennett said today there is nothing strange about the various bank accounts used for Socred party purposes not being under the control of party officials.

"There is nothing mysterious," he said. "Political parties raise funds in a number of ways."

A BCTV report on the intricacies of Social Credit financing has revealed the existance of several bank accounts under the control of party bagmen. Party officials say they were unaware of these accounts.

Bennett suggested the press is twisting things around.

U-deposits threat to farming?

VANCOUVER (CP) — Farming near surface uranium deposits in the Okanagan Valley, pinpointed for the first time Wednesday, might be hazardous, Dr. David Bates, chairman of the royal commission into uranium mining, said Wednesday.

The 46 deposits, located between Oliver and Kelowna and near Kamloops, are on Crown rangeland, agricultural reserve land and within municipal areas. Many are in areas which supply water for domestic use, cattle, irrigation and recreation.

Sixteen sites are within five kilometres of Oliver, another 16 within Summerland, eight within ten kilometres of Penticton.

The deposits are not radioactive but since uranium is a heavy metal associated with lead and thorium, toxicity problems might arise.

"It is possible that using fertilizers on this particular land might have the effect of mobilizing uranium," Dr. Bates said.

The commission intends to find out whether irrigation and fertilization might release the surface uranium.

The commission made public a report by Vancouver geological consultants detailing the locations.

Dr. Bates said the surface uranium concentrations, which do not have a level of radioactivity common in other uranium deposits, have been discovered by geochemical means.

"The concentrations are called 'young' because they have not yet reached the radioactive stage," he said.

B.C. lawyers can advertise

VANCOUVER (CP) — The B.C. Law Society has ended a contentious issue by agreeing to allow fee advertising by lawyers.

Deputy secretary Dennis Olmstead said a bulletin will go out to society members saying that lawyers can advertise fees, but the mechanics of how this is to be done have not been determined.

The resolution climaxed two days of discussion in which benchers — the society's executive body — voted to amend their stand on advertising by a vote of nine to six.

The law society's previous prohibition on advertising resulted in disciplinary action against two lawyers, Don Jabour and Jack James, and action by Jabour against the law society under the Combines Investigation Act.

"I think at first there will be a number of ads placed in newspapers, the newspapers will make a bit of money, and then, after the initial excitement over it dies down, legal ads will become something like a personnel file and become relegated to the back of the newspaper in the classifieds," Harry Rankin, law society treasurer, said.

Stock brokers bracing for BCRIC run

By AL FORREST

Victoria brokerage houses are braced for panic selling of BCRIC shares.

Not that there's anything fundamentally wrong with the corporation.

It's just simple arithmetic.

Present commission for selling five shares is about $1.25. This will go to $10 on Feb. 1, Vancouver Stock Exchange president Robert Scott said today.

The change will have a dramatic effect on small holdings. Anyone owning 100 shares can breathe easy because they will be above the minimum rate level and their commissions will not change.

The hundreds of thousands still holding five-share lots, however, face this situation. If BCRIC is selling at $7 (it's just under) the selling price before February is $35 minus $1.25 commission for a net return of $33.75.

After Feb. 1, the same sale would be $35 minus $10 for a net return of only $25.

To get a net return of $33.75 the price would have to jump $2 a share to just under $9.

Scott has mixed feelings about the panic sale that is just beginning to pick up steam in the rush for extra Christmas cash.

From the stock exchange point of view, he said, he is pleased the five-share holdings are being consolidated, expecially into board lots of 100. It will make it easier for the VSE to handle the transactions.

But from a personal point of view, he said, he would rather see people rushing in to buy, not sell.

The buying commission is also low right now and this is an ideal time to build up to a board lot before the commission rate increases.

In Victoria, George Evans of Pemberton Securities agreed that the stock remains fundamentally sound.

"I know people will be selling because they need a little extra Christmas cash and they want to take advantage of the special commission rate. But BCRIC is an excellent buy."

The recent dip has been in response to a downtrend in lumber prices but BCRIC has other things going for it that more than counteract this temporary weakness, Evans said.

"Pulp is a major part of BCRIC holdings and the price is strong. I understand there could be a $25-a-ton price increase in January. Newsprint is also in demand."

Evans said BCRIC also has $506 million sitting in the bank earning interest at about 14 per cent.

"That is significant income for any company. And they may use that money at any time to buy into some interesting resource proposition."

Evans said an American-owned (Cyrpus Anvil) lead-zinc-silver mine near Williston Lake in northeastern B.C. is a possible buy along with various natural gas projects.

Evans said the lumber price weakness is only temporary.

Britain, U.S. mobilize peace airlift

Times News Services

NAIROBI — Britain and the United States are mobilizing a massive airlift to ferry men and equipment to Zimbabwe Rhodesia to implement the peace agreement in the former British colony, diplomatic sources said today.

The sources said 80 planes, including giant C141 Starlifter transports of the U.S. Air Force, would take part in the "air bridge" from London to Salisbury in the next "three to four days."

According to the sources, the United States is contributing between 10 and 12 giant transport planes to the airlift, while Britain is sending 30 VC10s and 38 Hercules transports, with men and equipment to re-establish a temporary British presence in Zimbabwe Rhodesia under the new agreement.

The United States, which is not a party to the settlement reached in London Wednesday, is only helping Britain with transportation and will not send troops or personnel to the African nation, one official said.

The British are sending up to a dozen jet airliners carrying officials and personnel to re-establish temporary British power in the African country, which broke away from Britain in 1965. The officials presumably will be headed by the British governor who will rule Zimbabwe Rhodesia until new elections are held.

He is expected to be Lord Soames, the son-in-law of the late Sir Winston Churchill.

British officials declined to comment on the actual number of personnel which will be airlifted into Zimbabwe Rhodesia, but the number of planes suggested the figure was in the hundreds.

Officials also disclosed not all of the passengers would be British, indicating that an early contingent from the British Commonwealth would be on the airlift. The peace plan calls for 1,200 monitors from the Commonwealth to watch over the cease-fire.

The officials said the U.S.-British airlift has been in the planning stages for several weeks, but the green light for implementation was not given until the three parties in the London peace talks reached agreement on a cease-fire Wednesday night.

Blacks and whites reacted cautiously Wednesday night to reports of the ceasefire agreement ending the bloody seven-year guerrilla war.

"We'll believe it when we see it happen," said a reporter with the Salisbury Herald, which reported the event in its today's edition under a normal-sized headline proclaiming: "Ceasefire Agreed in London."

"We've heard it all before," he said, referring to previous attempts to end the war that began under the white-minority government of Ian Smith and has continued since moderate black Prime Minister Abel Muzorewa took over earlier this year.

Two nights ago, Zimbabwe Rhodesian television interrupted regular programs with a report of a ceasefire agreement, but the report turned out to be wrong. The British merely had given the guerrillas an ultimatum to accept their ceasefire proposal.

Under the London agreement, a British governor will come to Salisbury shortly to run the country pending elections in which all parties, including the guerrillas, will participate.

Union boss goes to jail

TORONTO (CP) — Sean O'Flynn, president of the Ontario Public Service Employees Union, was sentenced today to 35 days in jail for contempt of court after defying a court injunction against an illegal strike by Ontario jail guards.

The union announced that an appeal would be started and it was expected O'Flynn would be out of jail by evening.

In passing sentence Mr. Justice Douglas Carruthers of the Ontario Supreme Court told O'Flynn: "You were determined to rise above the law and to defy it, taking 3,000 law-abiding citizens with you."

The judge said O'Flynn had openly defied the courts through the news media and quoted excerpts from The Star, The Globe and Mail and the CBC, which he said were strike-making statements.

"You admitted making all these statements," he said.

Soviets warn NATO off

BERLIN (AP) — Foreign ministers of the seven Warsaw Pact member nations ended their two-day conference today with a new warning to the NATO alliance to forsake plans for stationing new U.S.-built missiles in Western Europe.

In a communique, the Soviet Bloc foreign ministers condemned NATO's "dangerous plans" to station 572 Pershing II and Cruise missiles in Western Europe.

They also repeated their call issued last spring in Budapest for convening of another disarmament conference.

The ministers said the communist alliance would be interested in negotiating a series of "confidence-building" measures designed to reduce tensions in Europe.

The East Berlin meeting took place one week before a conference of NATO defence ministers during which the missile deployment plan is expected to be approved.

Chances for approval of the missiles received a boost Wednesday night when delegates to the Social Democratic Party convention in West Berlin endorsed Chancellor Helmut Schmidt's stand on the issue.

Bennett mum on mass firings

not made a decision to sue but he doesn't rule out the possibility and will seek legal advice.

Kempf claims the mass firing is part of a complete staff re-organization and has nothing to do with dirty tricks.

Husband, who has worked for the caucus only since July 25, sees himself as an innocent bystander.

"The infamous Lettergate tapes were recorded 10 months before I was hired," he said.

The other fired researchers are Susan Cowan and secretary Penny Lifton. Cowan has left on a planned one-month vacation in Australia but Lifton says it's clear dirty tricks is behind the dismissals.

If so, this means the affair has touched a total of seven persons so far, the four just fired plus three who resigned — Kelly, Ron Greig, former communications aide in the premier's office, and George Lenko, personal assistant to Human Resources Minister Grace McCarthy.

Conspicuously absent from the list is the name of Glen Mitchell. He was the chief caucus researcher when the dirty tricks tapes were made at a Socred seminar in September, 1978. He is the man Mackay claims authorized everything she did to promote the play-dirty style of politics within the party.

Mitchell now is executive assistant to Universities, Science and Technology Minister Pat McGeer. He has said repeatedly he has no intention of resigning.

McGeer, questioned today about Mitchell's part in the affair, went on the offensive. He subjected reporters to a lengthy interrogation on whether their newspapers or broadcasting stations had carried "the full story."

NDP leader Dave Barrett compared the situation to a bleeding wound.

He said attempting to cauterize the wound by firing the Socred caucus research staff won't work.

"For Mr. Kempf to say there is no connection between the firings and dirty tricks is, frankly, absurd. Mr. Kempf may fool himself, he may fool the premier but he's not fooling anybody else."

Kempt may have manufactured some fresh trouble for himself when he told reporters that caucus members, polled by telephone, unanimously endorsed the decision to wipe out the research staff.

political party — are through innuendo, being taken as something wrong.

"Someone should be taking a close look at the way in which some of these charges or allegations are being handled," Bennett said.

NDP leader Dave Barrett said Wednesday the revelation of the bank accounts is "proof positive that the grassroots of the Social Credit party have been betrayed.

"It is a controlling group of interests, yet to be totally revealed, using the party for purposes still to be completely understood," Barrett said.

Barrett said if as claimed in the BCTV report, someone in the premier's office is authorizing expenditures from these accounts, then the premier's office has some explaining to do.

Bennett said however he doesn't know who signs the cheques on these accounts but there is nothing wrong with members of his staff, working on their own time, dealing with such political matters.

He also said on occasion, special funds are collected to pay for projects that he has authorized, such as the printing of a political pamphlet.

Log-fish dispute patched

The rift between two provincial ministries over a salmon spawning stream destroyed by logging in the Queen Charlotte Islands appears to have been healed following a lengthy meeting between the two ministers Wednesday.

After talking with Forests Minister Tom Waterland, Environment Minister Stephen Rogers said he is convinced there will be a better liaison between the two ministries.

Rogers and ministry regional director Don Smuin said earlier this week that concerns of the environment ministry were ignored last spring when the forests ministry issued a permit to QC Timber Ltd. to log the steep slopes above Riley Creek in Rennell Sound.

Federal fisheries opposed the permit, but after Premier Bill Bennett and Waterland issued strong objections Ottawa backed down and allowed the logging to go ahead.

Rogers said Wednesday the main objective of his meeting with Waterland was not to dwell over what happened in Rennell Sound, but to discuss what has been learned from it.

Asked about his placing the blame for the logging permit on the forests ministry, Rogers said he is still waiting for a full report from Smuin.

Guard cleared of lying

NEW WESTMINSTER (CP) — A British Columbia Penitentiary guard was found not guilty Wednesday in B.C. Supreme Court of perjury during the trial in February of two women charged with aiding an attempted escape from the prison.

Justice S. M. Toy said Konstantine Pondelicik unknowingly gave false testimony during the trial of prison activists Gay Hoon and Betsy Wood.

The decision leaves unresolved the question of how Andy Bruce and four other prisoners obtained a .38-calibre handgun which was in their possession during the well-planned breakout attempt in January, 1978.

So far, the Crown has failed to obtain conviction of anyone accused of aiding the prisoners.

During the attempted breakout, in which a guard was stabbed in the neck, Bruce, Ralph Saumer, Steven Hall, Richard Wright and David Bennett seized 13 hostages.

After the negotiated settlement, in which the hostages were freed, police charged two of the hostages, Hoon and Wood, with complicity in the attempted break.

Both women were found not guilty.

The perjury charge against Pondelicik, a guard at the penitentiary since 1975, arose out of statements Bruce made to the court during women's trial.

Called as a defence witness at the women's trial, Bruce alleged that the escape plan included an arrangement in which a guard would stash a gun in a washroom.

Bruce claimed that the guard was to receive $1,200 and an ounce of cocaine in for his assistance.

Bruce alleged that Pondelicik sent a postcard to his cell on which he (the guard) wrote an inscription which was intended to signify approval of the arrangement.

Pondelicik, recalled to the stand after Bruce made the allegations, denied Bruce's claims and testified that he did not write the postcard.

After police obtained expert opinion that the words on the postcard were in his handwriting, Pondelicik was charged in June with aiding in the attempted escape and with committing perjury.

The charge of aiding the escape was dismissed in October, after Bruce, flown from Millhaven prison in Ontario, refused to testify.

However, Judge J. K. Shaw committed Pondelicik to stand trial on the perjury charge.

During the two-day trial, the postcard which allegedly triggered the escape attempt was described as part of the promotional material in an album released by the British rock group Pink Floyd.

Permit given strikebreaker

SURREY (CP) — The federal employment and immigration department has accidentally given a U.S. citizen permission to work as a strikebreaker in this Vancouver suburb.

A department spokesman said Wednesday Thomas Robert Henderson, 29, was given permission to work at Propharm Laboratories. The company works out of the same premises as Adams Laboratories which was struck by the Retail, Wholesale and Department Store Unions, local 580, Feb. 21.

Both companies are owned by the same man and both are being picketed by the union.

Immigration spokesman Phil Barter said the law prohibits non-Canadians from entering the country to become involved in labor disputes and department policy has in the past prevented them from working in a strikebound plant. He did not say how Henderson managed to get the permit.

He said the permit cannot be revoked, but will not be renewed when it expries Jan. 1.

Hit-and-run hurdle lifted

VANCOUVER (CP) — A British Columbia Supreme Court decision Wednesday has opened the way for prosecution of hit and run cases stalled for three months because of legal wrangling.

Justice F. Craig Munroe allowed the Crown appeal of a case in which a provincial court judge ruled in favor of a man charged with failing to remain at the scene of an accident.

Judge E. J. Cronin ruled Aug. 27 that a section of the Motor Vehicle Act which requires a driver to remain at an accident and identify himself is too vaguely worded to indicate an offence.

Since the decision, charges have been thrown out of traffic court at the rate of two or three a week and there is a backlog of charges that have not been brought to court.

Cronin's decision was based on the meaning of the word incident in section 54A (1) of the act.

The section says the driver of a vehicle "that is directly or indirectly involved in an incident on a highway" must remain at or immediately return to the scene of the incident, render all reasonable assistance, and provide full identification to others involved.

Cronin agreed with defence lawyer Henry Sarava that an incident on a highway could mean almost anything and quashed the charge against Les Soltys, a Vancouver salesman.

The judge ruled the word was impossible to interpret and did not create an offence known to law.

Citing Section 60 of the act, which prescribes a penalty for any violation of the act's provisions, he rejected the defence submission that the section does not create an offence.

"Whether or not a person is involved in an incident on a highway requiring him to comply with Section 54A (1) is in each case a question of fact, but clearly a collision resulting in injury to the person is such an 'incident' notwithstanding that other happenings on a highway, even though terrifying, may not require compliance with the section, Munro said.

"It is a question of fact to be determined in each case, applying common sense."

UBC student fees may go up

VANCOUVER (CP) — Student tuition fees must pay 10 per cent of the University of British Columbia's net operating costs, the board of governors decided Wednesday.

However, the board set no deadline for raising the fees, which cover less than 8.5 per cent of operating costs.

A 10 per cent fee increase to take effect in April was announced last June.

Interest conflict sparks resignation

COQUITLAM (CP) — Mayor Jim Tonn has resigned as a director of the Urban Transit Authority, citing conflict with his roles as a municipal politician and a director of the Greater Vancouver Regional District.

At the GVRD, he voted against the transit agreement under which the authority and the Metropolitan Transit Operating Co. will take over transit from Hydro.

Tonn said he feels he would be working for the agreement on the UTA board and against it at the GVRD.

Licenced towboat workers settle

VANCOUVER (CP) — Licensed workers in British Columbia's towboat industry have voted in favor of a new, two-year contract, Arnie Davis, of the Canadian Merchant Service Guild, said Wednesday.

Davis said the agreement gives 850 towboat captains, mates and engineers a salary increase of $200 a month in the first year and a nine-per-cent pay boost in the second. Base rates were not available.

Share the wealth

It is quite natural that Victoria's new mayor, Bill Tindall, isn't terribly impressed with the idea of revenue-sharing among the Greater Victoria municipalities.

Victoria, after all, would probably end up with the short end of the stick. Because of its large industrial and commercial tax base, it would doubtless end up as a "have" municipality that might have to give up some of its revenues to the less wealthy municipalities like Saanich or Oak Bay.

No sensible mayor is going to volunteer to give up money without obtaining any tangible benefit in return.

Tindall's objections notwithstanding, however, the idea of revenue-sharing is probably going to be one of the most important topics of discussion for Greater Victoria's local governments in 1980. Tied to it should probably be the idea of some amalgamations, not of municipal governments per se, but of specific government services.

For too long Victoria has been able to have its cake and eat it too. It has been able to develop the commercial and industrial facilities to give it a strong tax base (just look at the number of large shopping centres that are situated just yards within the Victoria boundary). At the same time it has not had to provide full services to all the persons employed in those facilities and their families because they have all fled to the bedroom communities of Saanich and Oak Bay.

And Victoria has, to date, been able to ensure that the situation does not change. Through the regional board, it has made certain that the ability of the other municipalities, most especially Saanich, to expand their commercial bases remains extremely limited.

Yet neither is Victoria willing to share the wealth it gains from its semi-monopoly position regarding tax bases.

It doesn't make sense. And although Victoria itself will benefit, the Greater Victoria region has a whole will suffer if the situation is allowed to continue unchecked much longer. The outer municipalities will be faced with the unpalatable choice of raising homeowners' taxes significantly or cutting back on services. Whichever the choice, it will lead to an imbalance in taxes and/or services between municipalities.

It is not reasonable to expect the municipalities involved, each of which has a high degree of self-interest, to conduct an impartial study of how revenue-sharing and/or service amalgamation would work and of what the effects of it would be.

The provincial government or some other non-involved body should begin such a study as soon as possible. Action will be needed within the next year or two.

The right priority

Sitting on the shore, it is easy to be coerced into believing that the federal fisheries department is treading on thin ice when it imposes restrictions that will cut a large number of people from the B.C.'s annual gold rush — the roe herring fishery.

The United Fishermen and Allied Workers' Union has charged that sending the gillnet fleet to sea with only one 75 fathom net (240 feet) per boat instead of two will cut the ranks by 25 per cent, from 4,000 to 3,000 fishermen.

The UFAWU came out with what appears on the surface to be a sane solution. Instead of cutting the number of jobs, impose a boat quota so that at least every man will have the opportunity to make some money.

That solution, however, does little to alleviate what's believed to be the major problem. The herring stock dropped drastically this year over 1978. The catch was only 41,000 tons, 11,000 tons less than would the fisheries department conservatively estimated should have been taken.

Landlubbers and others quickly point to the evils of overfishing. The trouble is the federal fisheries department is not convinced that overfishing is anywhere near the whole explanation.

Bob Humphreys, regional herring co-ordinator for fisheries, says that if the stocks are not being overfished, then they are declining either because of natural fluctuations or because they are somehow being affected by the act of fishing.

He is the first to admit that Fisheries doesn't have the research data on how herring fishing, which takes place close to the shorelines where the herring spawn, affects the fish's natural instinct to spawn.

However, he says there is a widely held belief that the noise of boats, the signals from echo sounders that track fish and record water depths, and the disturbance caused by nets in the water are scaring the herring and driving them out of the more desirable spawning areas and out of the nets of fishermen.

Unlike other fisheries, the herring fleet works in very close quarters. Hundreds of boats will fish in one area and then migrate north in a group, fishing the herring as they come in from sea to spawn. A significant reduction in the amount of gear in the water should cut the disturbance of the fishing grounds, and, it is hoped, rejuvenate the stocks.

Although the seine fleet, which uses large nets to scoop fish from the water, has not been hit as hard as gillnetters, the fisheries department has asked the fishermen voluntarily to pool their catches to reduce further the amount of gear in any one area.

A boat quota would not reduce the number of herring skiffs and nets in the water.

Last year the herring season was worth $130 million to the fishermen. Next year's quota has been set about 10 per cent less than this year's catch and there is speculation that the price of roe-herring will drop. Nevertheless, severing the ability of a few hundred people to make a lot of money in a short time hurts. The continuation of the resource, however, must be the first priority.

Stagflation threats peace

NEW YORK — Nobody seems to know when the term "stagflation" was first used or who coined it. The earliest publication of the term, as found in the political lexicography of William Safire, occurred in 1969 in an article in The Times of London by Peter Jay, its economic editor, later the British ambassador to this country and now a visiting scholar at the Brookings Institution in Washington. But Jay insists that he did not invent the term. He thinks it originated in the United States.

As far as can be determined, the first published use of stagflation in the United States did not occur until 1971, when it was used in both The Washington Post and The New York Times.

On historical grounds, stagflation seems more likely to have been born on British than American soil, since the actual phenomenon of combined stagnation and inflation first appeared in Britain in the 1960's. The Vietnam War masked and muffled it in the United States. In 1968 unemployment in this country averaged 3.3 per cent, and in 1969 it was 3.5 per cent. The economic scene seemed more hectic than stagnant.

New relationship

But in the early 1970's the combination of rising unemployment and inflation appeared to mark a great divide in the working of the American economy, a shift from the period of an inverse relationship between inflation and unemployment (traced by the so-called Phillips Curve) to a positive relationship between the two.

Earlier, the Phillips Curve had provided the empirical backup for policies to stabilize the economy: to check inflation and slow the economy down (at the cost of somewhat higher unemployment) or to cut unemployment and speed the economy up (at the cost of somewhat higher inflation). If, however, unemployment and inflation were positively linked, stimulating the economy would increase both inflation and unemployment, and restraining the economy would reduce both.

Is the Phillips Curve really dead?

George Perry, a senior fellow of the Brookings Institution, has argued that the United States has shifted from the earlier postwar Phillips Curve to a higher one as a result of changes in the structure of the labor force caused by the entry of more women, minorities and young people, all with more tenuous holds on jobs.

The rather loose scattering of plots linking inflation and unemployment in different years has permitted different curves to be drawn, some sloping upward, others downward. It is possible that there is some truth in both the pro-and anti-Phillips Curve schools of thought, depending upon the time period covered.

In the short run, an induced slump will curb inflation at the expense of higher unemployment and an induced boom will reduce unemployment at the expense of higher inflation. In the longer run, however, inflation appears to have an enervating effect on the economy, raising the average level of unemployment and producing stagflation.

But now a new form of stagflation appears to be plaguing the economy, in which the sluggish growth of the economy and the persistence of inflation result from a shift in relative prices. This new breed might be labeled "relpricestagflation."

A particularly virulent strain of this virus occurs when the price of energy rises faster than the prices of other goods and services. (This has resulted from the restriction of supply by members of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries.) The average level of all prices then increases as a result of rigidities in the entire wage and price system that prevent other prices from falling enough to make up for the climb in the price of oil. This strain of stagflation might be called "oilflation."

Oilflation breeds huge trade and balance-of-payments deficits for this country. The resulting heavy outflow of dollars aggravates world inflation, including inflation in the oil-exporting countries. The chronic deficits also undermine the value of the dollar, causing the oil exporters (who are paid in dollars) to raise their prices still higher, a new vicious cycle in global stagflation, or "globflation."

Global effect

The huge and continuing rises in the relative price of energy impose heavy drags on the growth of productivity in the industrial economies and hence throughout the world.

Within the United States as well as internationally, stagflation changes relative incomes, exacerbating tensions between winners and losers, white-collar workers and blue-collar workers, men and women, whites and blacks, young workers and older workers, natives and immigrants (legal or illegal), management and labor. This may prove to be one of the most pernicious forms of the new stagflation as interest groups fight it out.

In the international arena, "intgroupflation" could spill over into war.

Hidden budget value rising

OTTAWA — Every year at budget time the federal government tells us about the $50 billion or so it is going to spend on our behalf. It does not tell us about another $20 billion or so it lays out in tax deductions, exclusions and deferrals.

This "hidden budget" represents the difference between taxes actually collected and those that would be collected without all the dodges that make life for accountants and tax lawyers so complex and rewarding.

For the first time, Canadians will be given an accounting of the tax expenditure system.

It works this way:

— When manufacturers are allowed to depreciate equipment at an accelerated rate, the effect is to make an interest-free loan from government to the company, the cost of which is borne by the rest of the taxpayers — but not accounted for.

Submerged subsidy

— When petroleum corporations are allowed to write off oil depletion allowances against income, the effect is to provide them with a submerged subsidy.

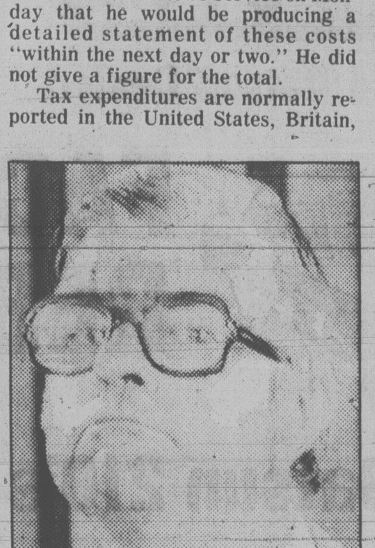
— When ordinary taxpayers are allowed to shelter Registered Retirement Savings Plans from the taxman's grasp, they benefit, while those who don't have the plans, or can't afford them, pick up the slack.

— When government decides to include only half of capital gains in income for tax purposes, half of all the available tax take from that source is foregone.

In theory, all the gimmicks, kickbacks and giveaways are available to each taxpayer equally, just as in theory, all who can afford it may own a Lincoln. Capital gains are not a big item on the tax returns of housemaids.

Besides the political question: "Who benefits?," tax gimmicks raise another pertinent question: "How much?" So far, Canadians have not known, but Finance Minister John Crosbie told FP News Service on Monday that he would be producing a detailed statement of these costs "within the next day or two." He did not give a figure for the total.

Tax expenditures are normally reported in the United States, Britain, and West Germany. In the United States, this year's tax expenditure budget will come to $136 billion, compared to a "direct" budget of $520 billion.



JOHN CROSBIE
. . . exposure promised

A recent study by the Canadian Tax Foundation, which argued strongly for public accounting of the expenses, calculated that in 1975 the Canadian figure had reached $13.2 billion. The normal workings of inflation, and a new round of giveaways in budgets since that time, have swollen the total. An actuary who has done work in this area for the government recently told FP News Service that he felt the figure for 1979-80 "would be in the area of $20 billion."

A major new item in the tax tab is a new round of incentives for the petroleum industry, which in 1978 came to $2.7 billion. This figure included deferred income tax of $753 million, depreciation of $598 million, depletion allowances worth $343 million and $246 million in other write-offs. There was also an item of $764 million for exploration and development expenditure write-offs.

A billion saved is a billion earned.

The Tax Foundation study by Roger S. Smith, Dean of the Faculty of Business Administration at the University of Alberta, identified 97 exemptions, deductions and deferrals available to Canadian individuals and corporations, ranging from such personal items as "the exclusion of gambling gains" to the rapid write-off of development expenses for mining corporations.

Millions sheltered

Smith calculated that Canadian individuals were able to shelter between $28.6 billion and $31.1 billion from exposure to the taxman, and the loss, at a conservative 30 per cent tax rate, was $9.3 billion.

He noted that "tax expenditures through the personal income tax system in 1975 were between 48 per cent and 76 per cent of the federal personal income tax."

The same calculation for corporations that year showed $6.1 billion in sheltered funds and a tax expenditure of $3.9 billion on that amount. The actual corporate tax paid that year was $5.1 billion, so the expenditure was about 75 per cent of the total take.

Sell-out

Why is the media so mute, and the public so ill-informed and apathetic about government-sponsored high interest rates, higher prices, and high inflation policies?

The Conservative government under Clark, abetted by provincial premiers, even more than the Liberal governments under Pearson and Trudeau, is selling out Canada to the banks and multi-national corporations at the expense of independent private enterprise, and the population at large. — F. Fred Kirkman, 521 Normandy Road.

Media makes more

I was listening to the 'Spectrum' program of the Mutual network on Nov. 23 when the following points were made:

The oil companies have been under fire from the media — Time/Life and the TV networks — because of their 'large profits' in the 3rd quarter, 1979. Astonishingly enough, it now appears that the media's own profits during that period were 50 per cent higher than those of the oil companies!

A recent survey of the 21 largest oil companies by the API in Washington showed that their average profit during the period was 6 cents per $1.00 of revenue. This was the same as that made by 105 other non-petroleum industries surveyed. Over the same period, the main media companies had a profit of 9 cents per $1.00 of revenue. The oil company with the "biggest increase in profit" was Amerada with a figure of 241 per cent. But Amerada's profit in 1978, a poor period for most oil companies, was 2.4 cents per $1.00. This year it was 5.8 per cent — about 60 per cent of that made by the media.

It would seem that the NDP and others who are so critical of the multinationals, should do a bit of homework. In comparing any commercial or financial activity, the only indicator that really discloses what is going on, is the percentage return on capital investment. A private citizen has a return of about 10.5 per cent on his Canada Savings Bonds, while the oil companies overall return is, I believe, between 12 and 14 per cent. — Roger Napier, 80 King George Terrace, Victoria.

Oppose war

Recently, these pages have been graced with advertisements by General Dynamics and McDonnell-Douglas enlightening the reader to the benefits of purchasing their respective fighter aircraft. A General Dynamics advertisement, for example, informs us that buying their aircraft will result in "A $2.8 billion dollar boost to the Canadian economy!" and "will mean more than 20,000 new jobs for Canadians". General Dynamics doesn't tell us whether these 20,000 jobs are directly or indirectly created or how long they will last, but if we assume (generously) that they would be directly created by their production program, simple calculation reveals that these 20,000 jobs will cost us $140,000 each. Why not just give 40,000 unemployed people $14,000 each for the next five years? This would directly create 40,000 "jobs" and likely a fair number of real indirect jobs. Or why not cut $2.8 billion from the federal budget (the government is forever telling us how they plan to cut expenditures) by returning the money directly to the taxpayers of this country. (That would be an effective reduction of more than $100 in taxes each).

Since it is obvious that the purchase of these aircraft is not economically beneficial to the country, there must, one would think be another reason for the purchase of $2.8 billion of fighter aircraft. That reason is, of course, to allow our nation to efficiently murder people and destroy their homes and livelihoods.

Armed forces do not prevent war, they create an atmosphere to nurture war, to make it inevitable. The "balance of power" proposition, long used to justify arms buildups, has not prevented two world wars, the Korean war, several Vietnamese wars, and numerous other wars in this century. Obviously "balance of power" is a sham.

"Nobody wants war" is a familiar refrain, but war can only be avoided by actively working for peace (we already have the armed forces working for war). Not voicing objection to having your tax dollars spent on war is tantamount to approving of war. Write the Minister of War (sorry, Defence) Allan McKinnon (you don't even need a stamp), or phone his constituency office (382-0221) or his departmental office (388-0226), and make your opposition to war known. — Steve Szalai, 1485 Hillside Avenue.

No contribution

I am disgusted by the picture of native Indians spearing salmon in their reproductive run in the Goldstream, a river that needs all the protection it can get and cannot support such an invasion as this.

These Indians contribute nothing to the propagation of the fish and game and sabotage the efforts of such as Howard English, sportsman's clubs and fisheries enhancement to restore the runs.

It is very frustrating. — Murray N. Giles, 3824 Carey Road.

THE ECONOMIST

The American labor movement is in crisis, all the more acute because so many of its leaders refuse to admit it. The unions face declining membership, declining political clout and increasing boardroom and shop-floor hostility. Troubles serious enough, perhaps, to justify turning last month's biennial conference of the AFL-CIO (American Federation of Labor-Congress of Industrial Organizations) into permanent emergency session to hammer out a survival strategy.

But nothing could have been further from the minds of the union bosses who gathered in Washington; those who have presided over the decline find it too painful to confront their own handiwork. Only one event gives cause for hope. After 25 years at the top, 85-year-old George Meany, at last, hands over the AFL-CIO presidency to his crown prince, Lane Kirkland. That change alone, however, will not end the present stagnation, which takes many forms:

- During the 25 years of Mr. Meany's rule, union membership has fallen from 34 per cent of the labor force (in 1955) to just over 20 per cent today.

- The AFL-CIO's once-legendary lobbying power in congress has been eclipsed by big business. Every time labor puts forward one of its pet projects business is able to thrwart it — and in a solidly Democratic congress too.

- Employers no longer accept unions as a fact of life. They are fighting back — and winning. The unions lose more than half their organizing drives. Even worse, they are losing three out of four attempts by management to throw them out of places where they are already well-established.

- The shift of industry from the unionized North to the anti-union South has reduced union membership. Despite devoting more resources to organizing the sunbelt states, fewer than 15 per cent of southern workers are union members.

- The shift of jobs from manufacturing to the service sector has created an even more serious problem. White-collar and service jobs in the private sector — especially in industries based on new technology — are almost entirely non-union.

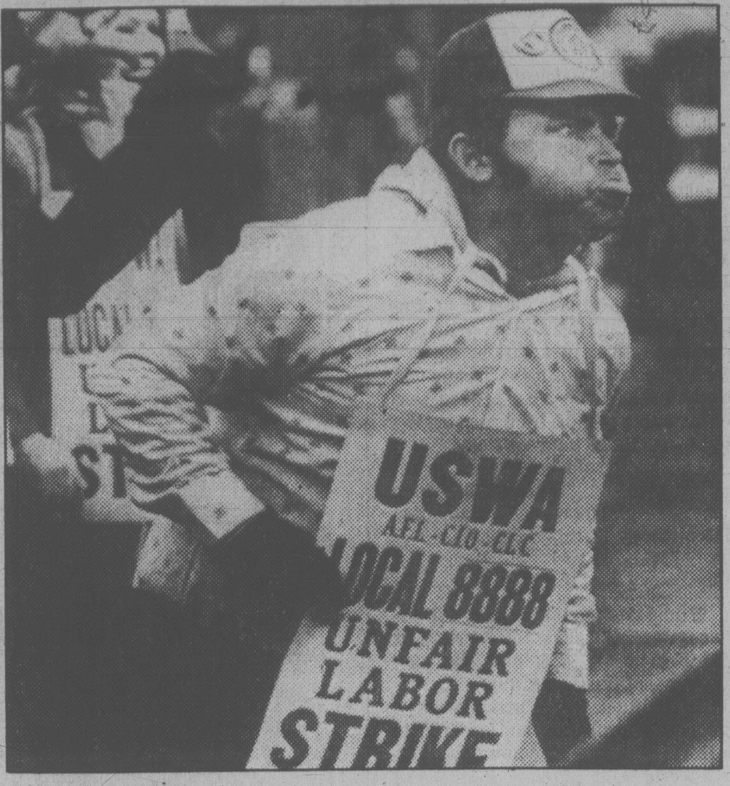
The present plight of the unions has encouraged many to believe that America will be the first society in which unions become redundant. American management is now so enlightened and benevolent, the argument runs, and unions so outdated, that there is nothing left for them to do. For countries — especially in western Europe — which have suffered the excesses of unions, that must sound a pleasant prospect. But it is not that simple.

For a start, rumors of the American labor movement's impending demise are much exaggerated. American unions are not about to disappear. But they are being cut down to size. Big labor is not all that big any more: with four out of five workers not belonging to a union, the labor movement has become just one pressure group among many.

Even cutting the unions down to size would be a welcome development for many Europeans, where union domination is always a threat. But even that is not without pain: the recent decline of American unions suggests that a society in which unions become too weak can be just as nasty and unpleasant as one in which they are too strong.

The American labor movement can be forgiven for thinking that life is unfair. Compared with its brethren on the other side of the Atlantic, it is the most pro-private enterprise of the lot, with neither the nationalizing tendencies of its French or British counterparts nor the passion for boardroom seats of the Germans or Swedes. Nor has it stood so much in the way of technological change and reduced productivity with a battery of restrictive practice. Yet it has been rewarded by its loyalty to capitalism with a sustained business offensive which has sent it reeling.

The enlightened part of this offensive is the thought, prevalent among many younger American managers, that if they treat workers decently they will not need to turn to unions for protection. So increasing numbers of American firms, especially in new technologies and services, are following the example of giants like IBM, Eastman Kodak and Texas Instruments in working hard at the kind of positive personnel policies which keep unions outside the factory gates.



A loyalty to capitalism betrayed?

Each claim by a company that it looks after its workers so well that unions are irrelevant needs to be closely examined. If it gives workers a chance to improve their job satisfaction, allows them a share in decision-taking and provides at least semi-independent grievance procedures, then fine. But if, instead, it is a form of suffocating paternalism, then it is not so fine. And some companies are not as enlightened as they pretend. The Wall Street Journal, which is not noted for its pro-union sympathies, recently discovered that non-union Texas Instruments is less benign than it appears: the company sometimes finds reasons for sacking workers who show pro-union proclivities.

There is also a nastier side to management's desire to avoid unions: it can often lead to unpleasant and illegal attempts to stop workers exercising their constitutional rights. A new profession of "union-busting" management consultants has grown up to advise companies how to fend off unions. Managment, of course, has every right to fight to keep unions out just as hard as unions are fighting to get in. But the consultants can also behave in ways which do management no credit.

Why have bosses mounted this anti-union offensive? Well, American industry, from cars to textiles, is faced with tougher foreign competition than ever before. Managers are desperate for maximum flexibility in adopting new technology to stay ahead of the game. They are also keen to save a bit on wages. So they would prefer to do without even the limited resistance of unions to change.

Free-market enthusiasts argue that the demise of the unions would make it easier and cheaper for industry to adopt new technology to meet foreign competition. As a result, American prosperity would be preserved. And at the same time workers would be looked after by benevolent managers. But most managers are benevolent because they fear the threat of unions; if unions disappeared altogether their benevolence could soon evaporate.

The business offensive, however, is successful only because the labor movement is in such a sorry state. American unions have never been able to capitalize on the sort of working-class consciousness that allows European unions to keep members. Ease of entry into the middle class also makes life tough for unions. And a reputation for violence and corruption has hardly helped.

All this means unions have to justify their existence to American workers. And that they have been failing to do. In part, the unions have been victims of their own success: in the crafts and industries where they are strong they have won good pay and conditions, especially in the North. The temptation has been to look after the minority of labor aristocrats and forget the rest. Today the unions need to develop two strategies: how to organize the American poor; and how to appeal to the rapidly growing white-collar and service sector which is affluent, educated and not impressed by yesterday's rhetoric.

Americans earning around $3 an hour need the professional bargaining skills of the unions. That is the first area of neglect that the unions need to remedy. But the unions have also neglected ideas likely to appeal to white-collar workers, who do not need the unions' bargaining muscle. When it comes to job satisfaction, workers' participation and enhancing status, the American unions are still in the Victorian age.

There are signs that being pushed on the defensive is forcing the labor movement to the left. But those, such as William Winpisinger, the machinists' boss, who want a more militant, socialist movement are suggesting a remedy which would make American unions even more unpopular on the shopfloor.

Teamsters' return 'a triumph for cynicism'

By A. H. RASKIN
New York Times

The shining hour of the AFL-CIO was its 1957 expulsion of the gangster-ridden International Brotherhood of Teamsters as a disgrace to organized labor. No other major institution, and certainly none in the business community, ever demonstrated a comparable readiness to sacrifice to rid itself of corruption. In the face of warnings by Jimmy Hoffa that "you need us more than we need you," the merged labor federation kicked out its biggest and strongest affiliate, a union with make-or-break power over every other union's strikes and organizing campaigns.

HOFFA . . . money, power

The red carpet that the federation's new leader, Lane Kirkland, has now rolled out for a return to the House of Labor by the unregenerate truck union is a confession of the collapse of that brave experiment in self-policing. The causes of its failure are at least as much an indictment of the larger society as they are a reflection on organized labor. Two factors have been principally responsible for stripping the AFL-CIO of its house-cleaning zeal. One was that the Teamsters grew bigger and stronger in exile while the strength of more unions inside the federation skidded downhill. The second was no less disheartening to a results-oriented labor movement steeped in the practices of business unionism: White House officials, through all of the last decade of Republican and Democratic governance, have shown a conspicuous disinclination to utilize against Teamster bigwigs the arsenal of new statutory weapons Congress provided for just that purpose in 1959.

The modest reforms that were forced on the scandal-scarred Central States Pension Fund appear to be coming undone, and the extermination of Jimmy Hoffa, while he was trying to reassert mastery over the union after his release from jail, is viewed by federal law-enforcement agencies as proof that only the faces have changed in underworld penetration of the Teamsters' power structure.

Hand-in-hand with this go Watergate's legacy of shattered public respect for government and a seemingly endless series of bribes to foreign government officials and military leaders by the biggest of American multi-national corporations, all still ensconced in seats of honor at industry's banquet tables. The result has been a sense in the AFL-CIO, reflected in Kirkland's suppliant bid to the Teamsters to come back home, that it is time to stop playing Don Quixote. It is a sad end of the trail for George Meany, the federation's founding father. He, more than all the others in the high command, insisted that the Teamsters must go. And it was his granite-like opposition that kept them out all these years. Despite his immersion in the swamp of the New York building trades a half century ago, Meany developed over the years so intense a revulsion against faithless union leaders that he outdid Walter P. Reuther and the other crusaders from the mass-production industries in demanding clean unionism as a keystone of the merger that ended two decades of labor civil war in 1955.

A strong plank establishing a permanent Ethical Practices Committee to keep the AFL-CIO free from any taint of corruption was incorporated in the organization's constitution. The plank is still there, but there is no Ethical Practices Committee. It has not functioned for more than 15 years. The official alibi is that the government took the ball out of labor's hands by passing the Landrum-Griffin Labor Reform Act in 1959, with its machinery for banning union crooks. If Uncle Sam can't do the job with all his powers of subpoena and criminal prosecution, why should anyone expect labor to do it?

That reasoning helps explain why, though the convention's new come-back-home resolution specifies that the returning sinners must fully observe "all the provisions of the AFL-CIO constitution and the rules, laws, standards and policies of the federation," the only real passport the Teamsters will need is a willingness to pay $4.5 million a year in per-capita dues as rent for their suite in the House of Labor.

It is a triumph for Jimmy Hoffa's cynical credo that money and power are all that count. It is a defeat, in which we all share, for the ideal of an economic society built on the principles of decency. It makes all too pointed the disdainful question John L. Lewis, an early non-joiner, asked Al J. Hayes of the machinists' union, the first chairman of the Ethical Practices Committee, shortly after the merger: "Al, have you found any ethical practices lately?"

The cruel charade

By MARJORIE NICHOLS
The Sun

In times of war, they shoot cowards. In the B.C. Social Credit party, where they sincerely believe that politics is war, they do it differently. It is the cowards who get to do the shooting.

How else can the insane actions of Tuesday be explained? Shortly before 4 p.m. a Social Credit caucus secretary delivered a terse press release announcing the firing of the four remaining members of the Socred research staff.

That brings to seven the number of minor Socred employees who have been decapitated in the interest of saving Bill Bennett's government from itself in the Dirty Tricks affair. The pathetic jerks who are allegedly running the affairs of this province are either ignorant cowards, or just plain cowards. Take your pick.

Do they not understand the British parliamentary system of government, which they are sworn to uphold? Have they never heard of accountability? Apparently not, or they would end this cruel charade.

In one way or another it appears that all of those who have been fired so far have been affected by the Dirty Tricks matter. But those seven, the lowly foot soldiers of the Socred army, weren't a secret guerrilla force.

Their superiors knew what they were doing. But those superiors are still sitting on their fat positions, praying that the blood of their inferiors will satisfy the ghouls. Well, it won't work.

Jack Kempf, the Socred caucus chairman who performed Tuesday's blood-letting, didn't even have the good sense to indulge in a bit of candor. He pretended that the firings had something to do with budgeting and reorganization. Garbage.

When questioned, Mr. Kempf didn't even know the amount of the caucus budget, which he allegedly was charged with re-working. Ellen Mackay, the tough lady who has stood off an entire government for several weeks, remained in form.

She made a statement to the waiting television cameras. But her hands were shaking and she looked exhausted. Another of the Tuesday afternoon slaughter victims was crying. Perhaps it occurred to one or all of the victims that there are only 16 shopping days left until Christmas.

The thought also occurred to Mr. Kempf, but being a witty fellow he said there always has to be a Scrooge in these little playlets. Ho. Ho. Ho.

But alas, it would appear that the caucus slaughter may all have been for naught. A bare two hours after the firings, BCTV made some startling disclosures. It seems that the Socreds have maintained some huge slush funds that not even the Socred party executive knew about.

Nothing illegal (in B.C.) about a political party keeping secret bank accounts funded from unknown sources, as BCTV pointed out. As far as election funding legislation goes, B.C. could qualify as an underdeveloped nation.

The questions raised by BCTV are nonetheless most grave for Mr. Bennett's future, if indeed he now has one. Remember those international airplane scandals. It wasn't the people who received the money who committed the offences, but rather the contributors who lied to their own taxman about the purposes for which the money had been spent.

What you have to ask yourself is this: Why would any legitimate organization that wanted to make a legal political contribution make that contribution to a secret bank account rather than directly to the political organization?

What if some of this money came from south of the border, say, channelled through a natural gas company with interests in both Canada and the U.S.? Nothing illegal in B.C., but you can be assured that Uncle Sam's Internal Revenue Service would be most intrigued.

Given the diligence BCTV has demonstrated so far on this story, it is bound to put the rest of the pieces together. Indeed, it may be that the television gumshoes will find the answers to a few of the pieces right in their own shop.

The fact of the secret slush funds raises some interesting conjecture about some of the advertising that has been carried on radio and television stations in this province in the last two provincial campaigns.

BCTV might, for example, go back and check on some of the institutional advertising that was carried on its own stations back in the dark days of the '75 campaign. They might also ask Dan Campbell if the term "Code Letter Y" means anything to anybody.

All of which brings us to the topic of William R. Bennett, premier and leader of the Social Credit party. Mr. Bennett must make a full public statement, immediately if not sooner.

He must explain those secret accounts and the sources of the funds. It matters not a damn whether the letter of any B.C. law has been violated. This is a matter of morality and integrity.

Before the judge

Kian Hock Koh, 1635 Cook, is charged with the attempted murder of 19-year-old Nancetta Lorraine Kobe outside their residence Nov. 8, and with possession of a rifle dangerous to the public peace.

Defence lawyer Gordon Macdonald elected trial by judge without jury and Koh was remanded until Jan. 22 when a 2½-day preliminary hearing begins.

A 46-year-old man who asked not to be placed on probation was given a 30-day jail sentence instead by Judge Fred Giles.

Edward Chester Myette, formerly of 270 Government, was found guilty of two counts of common assault against two human resources ministry officials.

On of the victims, Robert Gordon Leach, told the court Myette was intoxicated Nov. 20 and verbally threatened him and Olive McIntyre, using menacing gestures as well.

Leach said he and the some of the staff at the Blanshard Street welfare office were frightened of Myette. He he gave him a $20 food voucher and called a taxi for him to get him out of the office. He testified that Myette received the $315 a month due to him and sometimes received up to $300 in overpayments.

After Crown counsel Richard Law suggested a probation period with a provision that Myette go to collect his welfare before 11 a.m. and only while sober, Myette said he would rather pay a fine.

"I consider myself as an alcoholic," Myette said, "And maybe I couldn't keep my probation up as I should."

"You've been a perfect nuisance to a lot of people for a long time," Giles said, describing Myette as "flying off the handle like a little baby."

Myette had a three-page criminal record which included similar offences.

"This will be a birthday you'll remember," Ostler said before imposing a 15-day jail sentence on 19-year-old Ronald Wayne Cracknell of 639 Admirals.

Cracknell pleaded guilty to having care and control of a vehicle while impaired early Wednesday morning.

Crown counsel Don Laughton said Victoria police were called to a two-car accident at Government and Belleville at about 12:45 a.m. and found Cracknell sitting in his car, which had struck a taxi. Laughton said Cracknell first denied being the driver but later admitted it and had to be helped out of the vehicle.

Cracknell was convicted of impaired driving May 10 this year and was fined $400. In addition, he was fined $100 for refusing a breath test demand and given a suspended sentence and six months probation in May for obstructing a peace officer.

Cracknell said he lost a contact lens just before the accident, which occurred while he was celebrating his 19th birthday Tuesday night.

Fined for drinking-driving offences were: Giuseppe Joe Perri, 27, of 1822 Fairhurst, $350; and Maureen Sager, 43, of Castlegar, $100.

In addition, Sager was placed on six months probation and ordered to perform 60 hours of community service work.

Engineers delay dues in Duke Point protest

The union of Operating Engineers is withholding its per capita dues from the parent B.C. Federation of Labor because of the prolonged Duke Point jurisdictional dispute in Nanaimo.

Mike Parr, Local 115 business manager, said Wednesday his union's action is a protest over the failure of the federation's leadership to resolve the dispute between the building trades and the International Woodworkers of America.

Duke Point is an industrial park project which has been idle, except for construction of a sawmill, since mid-July.

The dispute centres around the building trades' insistence that all new construction is their work, while the woodworkers say construction of mills in the forest industry is their work.

IWA builders have kept working on the sawmill, but the building trades have invoked the non-affiliation clauses in their contracts and refused to work alongside builders of the woodworkers' union.

The B.C. Labor Relations Board has ruled that the building trades have a legal right to invoke the clauses.

Parr said the operating engineers are in "disagreement with the federation officers because they have failed to resolve this dispute."

"We feel strongly it should be settled inside the house of labor," he said, "which means there has to be a meeting of the minds between the IWA and the building trades."

The Canadian Labor Congress appointed Joe Morris, former congress president, earlier this year to try and bring the unions together for a settlement, but Morris didn't succeed.

"Withholding our dues is our only way to protest," said Parr, whose local normally has nearly 10,000 members paying the monthly assessment of about 25 cents.

Parr's union has about 85 members affected by the Duke Point dispute.

Dave McIntyre, secretary-treasurer of the federation, said he agrees with Parr the fight should be resolved within labor and insists that's where it will be solved.

He needed shotgun for 'psychological value'

A 36-year-old American said in B.C. Supreme Court Wednesday he wanted a shotgun for psychological value but it really wasn't intended for use on anyone.

Thomas Young Lackey, charged with nine offences just over a year ago including attempted murder of Sgt. William Hillcoat of Saanich police by shooting him with a shotgun, was being cross-examined by Crown counsel Robert Mulligan.

He said the shotgun was taken from a truck behind the Colony Motel the night before the Nov. 8, 1978, shooting incident in which Hillcoat was shot once and Lackey was wounded three times.

Lackey said he cut down the barrel with a saw and bought ammunition from a store.

Asked why he sawed the barrel down, he said the shotgun would raise a lot of suspicion being carried on the street.

Why did you want the shotgun? asked Mulligan.

"I was getting pretty apprehensive. It was there, you know. I didn't know what to do, I was pretty confused," he replied.

When Lackey said it was really not intended for use on anyone, Mulligan asked what did he want it for.

"Psychological value," responded Lackey.

"Psychological value on your victims like in Roseburg and Prince George," asked Mulligan.

"Yes," said Lackey.

He admitted committing first-degree robbery in Roseburg, Ore., Dec. 6, 1973, which involved an accomplice and a sawed-off shotgun, for which he was sentenced to seven years, and to break-in and robbery in Prince George in 1976, also involving a sawed-off shotgun and an accomplice, for which he was sentenced to 12 years.

He admitted to forgery in California in 1963, for which he got six months to 14 years and escape in 1965. He was paroled in 1968 and sentenced in 1974 for the Roseburg robbery.

He "walked away" from a prison forest camp in June, 1976, and entered Canada July 4, 1976, using the name Garry Ross, the name he was using when he was arrested for the Prince George robbery.

Mulligan asked Lackey if he was involved in binding a Safeway employee with tape in Roseburg and blindfolding him.

"I've never claimed to be a choirboy," he replied, adding that no one was injured.

He got the combination of the safe and took money. He admitted he had a sawed-off shotgun.

Lackey said the Prince George break-in and robbery involved a Safeway employee. He and an accomplice broke into the employee's apartment and again he had a sawed-off shotgun.

He agreed the employee was restrained by the hands and legs and blindfolded. While he got the combination of the store safe, he didn't use it.

Asked if he left the man bound to his bed face down, Lackey said: "No. Face up."

Lackey said he took a cashbox and cheques from the employee's wallet and cashed them for $1,000 to $2,000 worth of merchandise. He pleaded guilty to eight counts of forgery and was sentenced to one year.

He had heard his accomplice got eight years for the robbery but hadn't heard that it was appealed and the appeal upheld the eight years.

Lackey is standing trial on nine counts, among them attempted murder of Matsqui Penitentiary guard Alexander Smith by stabbing him, escaping, stealing a car, possession of a shotgun for a purpose dangerous to the public peace, robbery of a car in Saanich while armed with a shotgun, using a shotgun during flight after committing an indictable offence and attempting to murder Hillcoat.

Asked what he used to stab Smith, Lackey said it was a paring knife he obtained from the kitchen in Matsqui Penitentiary and carried in a back-support belt.

He said "yes" when asked if he stole a woman's car in Matsqui municipality.

Lackey said he carried identification in the name of Larry McLeod. This came into his possession in penitentiary after it "fell from his pocket." McLeod was a visitor.

He said he obtained identification in the name of James Nesbitt when a man gave him a ride into town from Sandown racetrack and he found the ID "stuffed down between the seat."

Shown notes Lackey admitted he wrote in hospital after the shooting incident, he agreed the notes said he ran out of ammunition.

In his testimony, he said there was still a shell in the gun.

(When police found the shotgun in the road, court was told earlier, there was an unexpended cartridge in it).

Mulligan asked why Lackey wrote that he ran out of ammunition when he still had a shell in the gun.

"There was one in there somewhere . . . it had no real use, it was out. I don't know how to explain it so you'd understand," he replied.

Lackey said he was held in solitary confinement at B.C. Penitentiary in New Westminster nearly all the time he was awaiting his trial. He said the penitentiary refused him medical help for his head injury and Prof. Michael Jackson of the University of B.C. law school helped arrange outside physicians' help.

The defence was expected to call three more witnesses today before completing its case.

Six years' total in hole once for year: Lackey

Thomas Lackey, jailed in California for much of his life, told B.C. Supreme Court Tuesday he has spent a total of six or seven years in solitary confinement including one stretch of almost a year.

Lackey, born in south San Francisco, raised in various parts of the United States and in reform school, was testifying at his trial on nine charges in Matsqui Nov. 3, 1978, and in Saanich Nov. 8, 1978, including escape and attempted murder of a prison guard and a policeman.

He said he had just turned 18 when he took someone's cheque book and signed his own name to it for $37 so he could get from Bakersfield to Los Angeles after being left stranded by a magazine sales crew.

He was caught. Lackey said the public defender advised him to plead guilty and he would get a sentence of six months. He did and he got a sentence extending to 14 years.

He spent time in such penitentiaries as San Quentin and Soledad for 5½ years. Charged with escape at one point for failing to attend a headcount, he was given another five years concurrent and served 2½ years.

Lackey said he couldn't handle prison conditions and solitary confinement in the "hole" and tried to commit suicide. He was sent to California Medical Facility which he called the "funny farm" where he said officials tested drugs on inmates on behalf on manufacturers.

Eventually, he ended up at a forest camp prison and was released when he was 23 or 24.

He went to Vancouver, Wash., where he had a wife and five stepchildren, and worked on docks and driving trucks for four years until an accident which shattered his ankle and left him without work for 1½ years.

Lackey said he learned how to commit robbery from listening to others. He pleaded guilty to robbery in Oregon.

Released on bail, he and his wife lived in Hawaii off and on. He got seven years for the robbery.

While at a forest camp prison, he took off rather than be returned to the penitentiary and went to Seattle under an assumed name.

Lackey said he has seen at least six men killed in "the hole," some by guards and some by prisoners, and dozens killed in the general prison population.

"I've seen people killed for a pack of cigarettes," he said.

There were "barbecues" where gasoline was smuggled in, then thrown into a cell and a match tossed in.

Lackey said his wife told him to turn himself in or she would get a divorce. He couldn't take the ultimatum and entered Canada July 4, 1976, and lived in a cabin in eastern B.C.

While there, he said, people who knew his background as a fugitive wanted him to pull a robbery for them.

Lackey said he wasn't interested and spent six or seven months in Smithers. The same people persisted and "I was sort of politely told that I could be turned in to the RCMP."

He committed the robbery in Prince George and was told by his lawyer Dennis Archambault that if he pleaded guilty he would get between three and five years and would actually serve 18 to 24 months and then would be deported to Oregon to serve the remaining 4½ years of the earlier robbery sentence.

When he pleaded guilty in Prince George, "suddenly the place was full of reporters and lawyers and they were making book on how many years I'd get. The judge took off on a tirade for 20 minutes. Suddenly I was an American terrorist for an armed robbery in which no one was hurt."

He was sentenced to three years for break-in which was part of the same offence and 12 years concurrent for robbery.

Lackey said he was flabbergasted and his lawyer talked to the prosecutor and he was told it would be straightened up on appeal.

No appeal was launched and he heard that Vancouver lawyer Sid Simons advised that an appeal would result in the 12 years being raised to life or a minimum of 20 years.

Lackey said he was injured in a 14-foot fall at the B.C. Penitentiary but was sent to a cell. Taken to Royal Columbian Hospital in New Westminster, he was told X-rays showed nothing wrong.

There was a threat of a riot because of his injuries, he said, and he was taken to Shaughnessy Hospital in Vancouver next day and had cracked bones and a lot of swelling.

Later, he was transferred to Matsqui from the Pen. He described Matsqui as pretty good "for an institution." He said guards brought him marijuana which he sold "hand over fist" for money to inmates.

Asked why he left Matsqui, he said "I was becoming more aware of the cycle I was caught in and there was no way out of it. This guy duped me into pleading guilty. I felt I had to, I felt I was going crazy in there, I couldn't take the pressure in there."

He said he had close to $2,000 secreted in a shoe when he left Matsqui.

Producer prices rise in U.S.

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Propelled by the sharpest advance in food costs since 1974, producer prices jumped 1.3 percent in November, the Labor Department reported today.

The sharp jump at the wholesale level offered concrete evidence that no relief is in sight for inflation-weary Americans.

Energy prices, a main contributor to the surging U.S. inflation rate this year, tapered off last month by rising at the slowest rate since February.

But food prices, which registered a small decline in October, shot upward by 2.6 percent — the biggest jump since November 1974, the Labor Department said.

Bonds

TORONTO (CP) — Prices were higher in active trading on the Canadian bond market Wednesday, as institutional buying remained firm.

The short end of the market was up 20 cents. Mid-, long-term and provincial issues rose three-quarters of a point. Corporate issues gained one-half point.

Day-to-day money was available at 13½ per cent.

The rally in the Canadian bond market, which developed following Monday's successful sale of federal government's issue, continued Wednesday.

Although participants voice scepticism as to whether rates have peaked, yields at current levels are still sufficiently attractive to prompt cautious additions to many bond portfolios, an analyst from Greenshields said. Similarly, the inclination to sell in this environment has been simultaneously subdued.

Analysts also attributed the rise to the strenghth of the Canadian dollar. The dollar backed away from the 86-cent level, but recent revisions of trade figures by Statistics Canada and an October surplus have allayed some fears about the dollar's prospects.

Company reports

Royal Bank

The Royal Bank has reported that its profit for the year ended Oct. 31, rose 16 per cent to $270.7 million, or $7.40 a share, from $233.9 million, or $6.39 a share, last year.

Profit for the fourth quarter increased 11 per cent to $84.1 million, or $2.30 a share, from $76 million, or $2.08 a share, last year.

Rowland C. Frazee, president and chief executive officer, said in the bank's annual statement to shareholders that earnings were only temporarily enhanced by bank-rate increases in the fourth quarter, as loan yields increased more rapidly than the cost of funds.

Flowerfest pruned to a mere show

By AL FORREST

Flowerfest — Victoria's new spring festival — is not really down the drain.

But it's drifting.

"Flowerfest will go ahead but it won't amount to much, just a flower show in the Crystal Garden," former Victoria Chamber of Commerce president John Ansell said today.

"It was planned as a major event but it has been scaled down.

"Right now there's no central organization that can put a major festival together," he said. "There's nobody steering the ship."

Ansell said Flowerfest is a dramatic example of the disintegration of Victoria's festival scene.

Two large organizations, the Festival Society and Victorian Days, had merged but have now fallen apart and are feuding.

The chamber has named Ansell chairman of a special committee to try to bring order out of the chaos.

(He is also heading a second task force on Victoria's tourist promotion problems).

His committee members for the festival study include two other chamber past-pesidents, Terry Farmer and Helen Beirnes.

Their task is to bring together all the rival groups, more than 30 organizations, operating in the field.

They include the Oak Bay Tea Party, Esquimalt Days, Saanich Strawberry Festival, Inter-Cultural Association, the Pan Pacific Society, the Downtown Victoria Association, various tourist organizations and the two disintegrating celebrations groups.

Ansell said there are two major problems when there are so many organizations in the field.

The obvious one, he said, is the lack of planning; overlapping on some weekends and nothing happening on the next.

An equally important problem is that there are too many demands on the public purse.

"Everybody is going to the public trough. My personal view is that there should be only one funding organization in the region."

Trying to get 30 organizations to agree to such an approach is a difficult chore, he concedes, but there may be a shortcut.

"If we can get the core municipalities to agree, we can solve this problem quickly. The municipalities, after all, are the source of funding. Everything depends upon money."

Ansell said talks will get under way immediately with council representatives to see if they will support a plan for central funding of festivals.

Then talks will be held with the various festival organizations to see if they will join the central organization which would become the festival equivalent of the United Way.

Gorge Road residents opposed to widening

Residents of Gorge Road East are organizing against a five-block road-widening project which will gobble up two metres of boulevard and a number of ornamental trees on the north side between Harriet and the CNR overpass near Washington.

"We're quite upset about it," Nancy Alexander, who lives on the corner of Harriet and Gorge, said Wednesday.

"It seems such a damn shame to take all the trees down."

Marily Chambers, 64 Gorge East, organized a petition and on Wednesday night got 10 of 12 homeowners in the affected area to sign the protest to city hall. An 11th man wrote his own letter to city council against the project.

"We feel it just isn't needed," she said today.

Chambers said traffic is heavy on Gorge, but a ban on left turns and a pedestrian-controlled stoplight at Balfour — opposite the Gorge Road hospital — would do more to improve conditions than widening the road.

Chambers said she has seen numerous accidents on this section of Gorge Road, most of them rear-end collisions and crashes involving left turns across oncoming traffic.

But Jack Reid, director of traffic operations for the city, said today the road-widening project will reduce accidents on this part of Gorge Road, which has the highest accident rate of any street in the city.

The widening will permit a two-way left-turn lane down the middle of the road and the other problem of cars exiting from driveways and colliding with moving traffic will also be improved.

Reid also said the pavement on Gorge is in very bad condition, "so we thought it the best time to make a move."

Removing the trees is a minus, he admitted, but the city parks department is offering to replace the flowering trees with new ones on the owners' property just behind the sidewalk. The city would maintain them at no cost to the owner.

One big plus would be the removal of all telephone and power poles, which both Miss Chambers and Mrs. Alexander cited as dangerous to traffic, if Victoria can get agreement on cost-sharing with B.C. Hydro and B.C. Telephone on putting wiring underground.

Grant curbs hurt: UVic

A University of Victoria senate report makes it painfully clear that restraints on provincial grants are hurting university budgetting in B.C.

In asking for a larger bite from the monies distributed by the Universities Council of B.C., the report quotes in detail problems created by funding which is less than the rate of inflation.

Ninety per cent of the university budget comes from the provincial grant, which rose 7.9 per cent this year and 6.9 per cent last year.

The report says efforts to convince the council that a larger grant is needed will have to be intensified if UVic is to meet its teaching and research objectives, while demonstrating that efficient use if being made of those funds.

Student fees will have to be raised annually on the basis of the previous year's increase in UCBC funding.

Black still interested in FP

TORONTO (CP) — The future of FP Publications Ltd. remained unsettled Wednesday as financier Conrad Black continued his pursuit of majority ownership in the country-wide newspaper group.

Armagh Price, daughter of Victor Sifton, whose family trust owns 22.5 per cent of FP stock, confirmed Wednesday that talks regarding possible take-over of the group have continued but no firm bid had been made.

Mrs. Price said Black's interest is speculative at this point but has not waned.

Any FP shareholders who want to sell their shares must offer them first to other existing shareholders.

The McConnell estate of Montreal is the largest shareholder with 25 per cent. Derek Price, a spokesman for Starlaw Investments Ltd., which controls the McConnell estate shares, said Tuesday that no bids have been received.

R.M. Davidson, deputy director of the federal Bureau of Competition Policy, said if Black and his associates gain control of FP Publications, the bureau will assign combines investigators to study the ramifications of the deal.

Black's associates in the purchase bid include John Bassett, chairman of Baton Broadcasting Inc. and George Gardiner, president of Gardiner Watson Ltd., a Toronto brokerage firm.

A spokesman for the Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunications Commission said an acquisition involving Black and Bassett would create connections in Toronto which involve the city's largest radio station (CFRB), the dominant television station (CFTO) and The Globe and Mail.

CFRB is owned by Standard Broadcasting Corp. which is controlled by Black's Argus Corp., while CFTO is owned by Baton.

Bell-Irving speaks at anniversary

The English-Speaking Union of the Commonwealth of Canada will hold its 25th anniversary dinner in the University of Victoria Faculty Club at 6:15 tonight.

Lt.-Gov. Henry Bell-Irving will be guest speaker and Hugh Keenleyside, former B.C. Hydro co-chairman, will be a special guest.

PPWC contract dates gibe

NEW WESTMINSTER (CP) - Workers at MacMillan Bloedel's container box plant here have voted to approve the terms of a new contract, said a spokesman for the Pulp, Paper and Woodworkers of Canada (PPWC).

The 22-month contract gives the 150 workers a 90-cent-an-hour wage increase in the first year and a 9.5-per-cent pay raise in the second.

The PPWC spokesman said a major victory for the union was having the contract expiry date moved to Sept. 1 from Nov. 1 to coincide with other plants in the province.

Going for broke on getaways

By PAUL MINVIELLE

Times are tough. The Canadian dollar is devalued, the economy is in a mess, unemployment is high, taxes are out of sight.

So how are British Columbians bearing up under the burden of gloom and doom?

Well, they sure aren't staying at home.

According to Victoria travel agents, they are zooming about the globe in record numbers.

"Things are booming," says Marilyn Madden, manager of Thomas Cook Travel at 1322 Douglas.

"We did extremely well in November and so far in December we're doing better than ever," she said.

One indicator used in the trade is travellers' cheques. Sales are higher than ever, despite an unfavorable exchange rate of 15 per cent or more on U.S. funds and the cost of the cheques themselves.

Are all agencies busy? A limited Times survey couldn't find one that wasn't.

At Featherstone Travel Services Ltd., they didn't even have time to talk to the press. "We're all very busy right now."

"It is incredibly busy," Pauline Dunlop of The Bay Travel said. And it's busy at a time when the rest of the staff is all out of action with the flu. She's handling the load singlehandedly.

Where does everyone get the money? Madden feels many people are economizing in other areas to afford their vacations.

"There have been wage increases, and others are taking in the belt an inch," she said.

Linda Koczan of Bains International Travel Service Ltd. also zeroed in on higher wages.

"They're making more money so I guess that's why they're travelling," she said.

In addition to vacation travellers, the usual crush of Christmas travellers bent on getting home for the holidays is on with a vengeance, Koczan said.

Laura Leno, a BCAA Travel consultant, said a lot of people are travelling now because they fear it might be hopelessly expensive in the future. In other words, travel now because you might not be able to pay later.

So where on the globe are they all trotting?

While Hawaii still beckons British Columbians, Madden sees change on the horizon.

Hawaiian resort operators, their facilities jammed with Japanese weighted down with valuable yen, are in no mood to be competitive.

"The Hawaiians don't need us," Madden said.

She sees Mexico becoming more popular. The attractiveness of Mexican beaches, coupled with slightly cheaper air fares that get you to Mazatlan and Acapulco, augurs well for the Mexican tourist trade.

Publicity and cheaper airline fares are rapidly making the Caribbean the "in " place to visit. It's close, different and inexpensive, considering what you get for the money.

Some agents recommend a Caribbean cruise as the best value.

"A cruise is no longer something associated with the geriatric set," said a Vancouver agent. "Now it's popular among young couples and singles. With the increasing number of divorced people and others looking for companionship there's a greater preponderance of unattached mature adults interested in cruises."

The political turbulence of three years ago has settled down in the Caribbean and is not evident in tourist areas. However, travel agents in some urban areas urge their customers to use discretion.

All agents queried on this one don't think it exists anymore.

Only two left on short list for new chief

By NORMAN GIDNEY

The Victoria police board is believed to have narrowed down its list of candidates for police chief to two men — a Vancouver city police inspector and a Royal Canadian Mounted Police officer now in Washington.

No one will comment officially, but two sources have told the Times that this short list contains the names of Insp. William J. Snowdon of Vancouver and M.G. Markel of the RCMP, now a liaison officer with the Canadian embassy in the U.S. capital.

Mayor Bill Tindall said Wednesday the police board has completed all its interviews and will make the final selection this month.

He would not comment on the reported prime candidates.

"I've heard people saying there's two people on the short list, some saying there's 10 on the short list," said the mayor.

Although no names have been released by the board, rumor has been rife among the Victoria police force and municipal political circles and the two names most frequently mentioned are Snowdon and Markel.

One report current late in November was that the original list of 34 candidates had been reduced to five — the two mentioned above, deputy Victoria chief Jim Smith (who is believed to have retiring Chief Jack Gregory's backing), one officer from another B.C. municipal force and a fifth unidentified police officer.

Snowdon was appointed chief of the Vancouver force's community relations division earlier this year. Vancouver recently switched to team policing methods and divided the city into zones for which teams of officers are responsible for patrolling.

The idea has been proposed for the Victoria force, although earlier this year both Gregory and Smith poured cold water on the concept.

Tindall did not commit himself to the idea during his election campaign but said he would commission a study of how team policing has worked elsewhere before making any changes in Victoria.

Snowdon is in Ottawa this week and not available for comment, but a spokesman for his office said: "We've heard all kinds of rumors.

"If you hear anything let us know."

Markel was asked by The Canadian Press in Washington about the reports linking his name with the Victoria police chief competition but CP said he refused to discuss publicly the reports that he is a candidate.

Campbell in close win over Dowell, Sturrock

CAMPBELL

Outer Gulf Islands director Jim Campbell Wednesday was elected chairman of the Capital Regional District's board on a second ballot of the 18 directors.

The first time around three directors — Campbell, Saanich alderman Howard Sturrock and Oak Bay alderman Shirley Dowell — each received six votes.

A 10-minute adjournment was called but it stretched into 30 minutes while directors huddled before the second ballot.

On the second ballot Campbell got eight votes, taking one each from his rivals.

Campbell's election was a defeat for Saanich mayor Mel Couvelier who said earlier he had kept Sturrock free of chairman duties on council to allow him to become CRD chairman.

Couvelier left the meeting after the second ballot but before the formal announcement of Campbell's victory.

In nominating Sturrock, Couvelier noted Saanich is the largest component in the regional district and has't had the chairmanship since the days of former mayor Hugh Curtis, who is now B.C.'s finance minister.

A Saturna Island sheep farmer, Campbell has been on the board for eight years, six of them as chairman. He lost out as chairman last year to city alderman Murray Glazier.

Campbell [illegible] members to keep him [illegible] fails to keep his promises. He said each director has a [illegible] be heard and [illegible] and the chairman has a duty to present the board to the public in a way which will enhance its credibility.

He said members of the regional community must be protected and that each component must be supported when all other considerations are consistent.

Sturrock was elected acting chairman on the recommendation of Campbell.

Free films at Newcombe

Two free film programs will be offered during the Christmas season by the National Film Board in collaboration with the Provincial Museum.

The first 90-minute program is Dec. 17 at 2 p.m. and [illegible] in the Newcombe. A selection of six short films will be shown.

The second program is set for Dec. 20 at 2 and 8 p.m. and features a 90-minute film, Giselle, featuring the National Ballet of Canada and starring Karen Kain and Frank Augustyn in the title roles.

Rhodes scholar from UVic

OSTERWOLDT
. . . environmentalist

Outdoorsman Ralph Osterwoldt, named B.C.'s Rhodes Scholar for 1979, will continue working at environmental protection through his law studies.

The 24-year-old University of Victoria student is in his final year of law at UVic and will specialize for his two years at Oxford University in studying environmental issues, jurisprudence and international law.

"I place a lot of value on appreciating our historical roots and our natural heritage," said Osterwoldt, president last year of UVic Outdoors Club and a former naturalist at Yoho and Waterton national parks.

He also is an ardent mountain climber, holds a bronze medal from the Royal Life Saving Society and an instructor's certificate in canoeing. He counts swimming, water polo, squash and basketball among his interests.

The scholar's activities also include singing bass for the UVic Chorus last year, teaching junior grades piano, membership on the Law Students Society executive in 1977-78, membership in the West Coast Environmental Law Association and Provincial Parks Association of Canada.

He received a law school entrance scholarship from the Law Foundation of B.C. in 1977 for being a student of outstanding calibre contributing to the public affairs of the country.

Prior to that he graduated with honors in Canadian and intellectual history from the University of Alberta. He is fluent in German and French and spent his third undergraduate year at the University of Freiburg on a student travel scholarship.

Ask the Times

Q. Can you tell me how long it takes to walk the West Coast Trail between Port Renfrew and Bamfield. Do people walk the trail in winter.? E.J.

A. The average walker takes between five and six days. People do walk the trail in winter. Most wait for a spell of good weather before undertaking the coastal walk.

Culture shock

After months of visiting some of the most desolate and depressed areas on earth, returning to Canada in the late fall involves some culture shock for Dr. Lotta Hitschmanova.

After seeing a hollow-cheeked woman clutching a starving child to her breast, she says it's hard to sit in a Canadian restaurant and watch a man eat part of a steak and then push his plate away.

On the subject of waste, Dr. Lotta becomes quite animated.

"What I am criticizing is the waste in the have countries," she said on her most recent trip to Victoria.

"I simply cannot believe the enormous portions served in our restaurants."

She abhors waste and to see one person wasting food that could keep a family alive for perhaps a whole day saddens her.

It's difficult, living in Canada, to imagine hunger. Some people see pictures of youngsters with distended bellies and are moved to support some international relief program.

Why not take a minute, right now, to drop some cash off at the Times business office or at any branch of the Bank of Nova Scotia?

Or why not write a cheque to the USC?

Donations may be made at the Times business office or sent to the Victoria Times, Post Office Box 300, Victoria, V8W 2N4 — or left at any branch of the Bank of Nova Scotia. Cheques should be made payable to the Unitarian Service Committee.

Portland hard on Ernie

McLean forces delay as fans pelt Bruins

Sudden-death overtime goals decided both Western Hockey League games Wednesday night as Ernie McLean's return to Portland was something less than successful.

The last time McLean's New Westminster Bruins played in the Rose City, the coach was led away in handcuffs after a young female fan charged him with assault.

This time, McLean stayed out of the pokey but his Bruins remain in the WHL basement as a goal by Florent Robidoux with two minutes and 58 seconds left in overtime handed the Bruins their 10th straight loss, 7-6.

In the other game, Dan Bourbonnais' power-play goal at 5:37 of overtime gave the visiting Calgary Wranglers a 3-2 win over Medicine Hat Tigers.

McLean pulled the Bruins off the bench and onto the ice with 48 seconds left in regulation time, complaining that the crowd was throwing objects at his team. Security personnel took 10 minutes to quiet the crowd of 4,092 before McLean returned the team to the bench.

In his last game here Oct. 16, McLean was arrested on a charge of fourth-degree assault, which is assault without serious bodily harm.

McLean, who was bailed out by Winter Hawk general manager Brian Shaw, has pleaded not guilty to the charge. No date has been set for his next court appearance.

The charge arose after McLean was confronted by Jackie Jones, 19, after a 5-1 loss.

Tim Tookey, who set up four goals was credited by Portland coach Ken Hodge and winger Robidoux, a former Bruin, with being the architect of Wednesday's victory.

"When Tim has the puck, you have to expect just about anything," said Robidoux, who scored for the fifth straight game.

"Tim's pretty tricky. He fools the defencemen and sometimes even fools us. You just have to be ready all the time. On that goal he just got it to me perfectly."

Tookey also set up Ed Cooper for two quick goals.

It was Cooper's first game at home. The left winger missed the first 24 games with a knee injury.

Darren Yankovsky, playing his first game since being obtained on loan from Spokane Flyers of the Western International League, also scored a goal for Portland but was the unwilling "goat" on the play that forced overtime.

Luc St. Mars was credited with the Bruins' tying goal at 9:53 when Yankovsky accidentally kicked the puck into his own net.

In Medicine Hat, Bourbonnais' goal came with the Tigers playing shorthanded as the result of a bench penalty assessed against coach Pat Ginnell.

Medicine Hat led 1-0 after the first period on a goal by Damian Stiert, who was called up from Drumheller Falcons of the Alberta Junior Hockey League. Calgary tied it in the second on a goal by Sheldon Currie. Brad Kempthorne scored for the Tigers and Jim Crosson for Calgary in the third.

Portland's victory moved the Hawks to within six points of West Division-leading Victoria but the Cougars get a chance to restore the margin when they face Billings Bighorns at Memorial Arena, starting at 8.

It will be "Salvation Army Night" in Victoria's last league game before Christmas. All children 12 and under can gain admission to the game by donating two tins of food to the Salvation Army's Christmas hamper program.

Cougars will face Moscow Spartak in an exhibition game at Memorial Arena on Saturday and then will depart for a 10-game road trip into the Eastern Division.

Racing fans take note: Derek picks a winner

Some mid-week musings and like that, seeing that nobody will take me to Hawaii.

And it seems that Derek Todd, who handled the morning line for the thoroughbred racing program at Sandown, can pick winners easier at Montreal and that's how he got to see the Grey Cup.

Derek was in Toronto a few days before the game for the wedding of his son. And he thought, "gee, I'm this far, why don't I go to the Grey Cup?" But you don't have a ticket, someone said. No matter, Derek was off to Montreal (alone), after the wedding, of course. And while he was investigating the prices scalpers were asking he happened across one seller who had a red section ticket, which is very good. When Derek asked the price, the man said $25.

Derek was floored because that was the regular price. Someone couldn't get to the game and the man just wanted his money. Shortly afterwards, Derek found himself on the 45-yard line, with one of the better seats in the house and within hailing distance of Prime Minister Joe Clark. He had bought a winner. He likened the game to a three-ring circus — the game itself, replays on the big board, the crowd enjoying itself in the stands, the crush afterwards getting away from the stadium and the mobs in the subway. In other words, he had a ball and who said it was tough to get a Grey Cup ticket at the last moment?

Now if Derek could only handicap the horses the same way!

Speaking of scalpers, there's always a group outside the Pacific Coliseum at Vancouver when the "big" NHL teams come to town. And some of them come with a good stock. The price drops as game time approaches, with triple or double the regular price being the usual rate depending on the location. And, on one particular occasion, at least, they were not being disturbed by members of the constabulary, which seems odd.

Athletes may find this interesting for it seems that the Australian government has taken a slightly different view than the Canadian government in aid to athletes. It wants to help while the feds in Ottawa have been cutting back on their support, as has been detailed previously. In Australia, however, the government has announced an increase of almost 100 per cent for 1979-80 in its allocation of funds for sport over the previous year. Of the $2,700,000 (Australian dollars) to be spent this year $A2 million will go to the Sports Development Program involving about 80 national sporting associations, and $A700,000 to the Australian Olympic Federation. Under the Australian plan, more than 40 per cent of the allocation will finance Australian participation at international meetings, a program considered essential in Australia's build-up for the 1980 Moscow Olympic Games

In addition, the government will provide $A500,000 towards the cost of sending athletes to Moscow and the winter Olympics at Lake Placid. And that's how the other half lives.

And also, the issue may have been resolved by now, but it seems that Sandown Park is included in the land freeze, or whatever; and, for that reason, standardbred fans may not have a new restaurant they might have had at the track next year.

At any rate, Jim Keeling Sr. of Cloverdale Raceways was saying that he and concessions manager Doug Gillespie came over here a while ago with plans for a new restaurant to be built at Sandown, but could not obtain a building permit because of the restriction.

"So I guess we won't have the restaurant for next year unless things change," Keeling added.

And wouldn't that have been a welcome addition to the track?

Which brings up Teletrack. That's an $8-million betting centre which features a 24 by 32-foot screen which shows live, color broadcasts of races (thoroughbred and standardbred) from five New York tracks, is replete with restaurant, bars and cushy seats in a moviehouse-like setting with . . . of course . . . mutuel machines.

Why bother to go to the track? It may come to that.

Joy shows in Toronto

By The Canadian Press

There is little left of the player-management squabbling and trade talk that dogged Toronto Maple Leafs during their mid-November blahs.

The dressing room frowns that typified the Leafs' discontent as they struggled through the early-season doldrums have turned to smiles. The Leafs have a new winning knack and coach Floyd Smith says the club's 3-2 National Hockey League conquest Wednesday night of Montreal Canadiens has given it the respectability it lacked a month ago.

"Maybe people will take a look at us now and consider us a serious hockey club," Smith said. "It was our biggest win of the year."

It was an all-round team effort and the Leafs' first win over the defending Stanley Cup champions in regular season or playoff action since Nov. 17, 1976. The win extended Toronto's undefeated streak to five games, while the Canadiens have won only once in their last six, tying three and losing two in that stretch.

Elsewhere, Buffalo Sabres whipped Atlanta Flames 6-1, Vancouver Canucks tied Pittsburgh Pengins 3-3, Minnesota North Stars crushed Edmonton Oilers 6-1, Detroit Red Wings outlasted Winnipeg Jets 6-4 and Chicago Black Hawks rallied to tie New York Rangers 3-3.

The two points Toronto gained were the result of an opportunistic power play, solid goaltending by Mike Palmateer, the scoring punch of Toronto's kidline of John Anderson, Laurie Boschman and Rocky Saganiuk and the stalwart defensive performance by the Leafs' checking line of Walt McKechnie, Dan Maloney and Ron Ellis.

Maloney held the Canadiens' high-scoring Guy Lafleur in check most of the night.

Montreal took two penalties in the first period and the Leafs took advantage of both for a 2-0 lead.

In Pittsburgh, 19-year-old Brent Ashton scored two goals and seldom-used goalie Curt Ridley turned away a barrage of shots to help the Canucks to their tie.

Ridley has played in just five games this season.

"I'm still getting used to it," said Ridley of his backup role. "I've never had to do this before, but I've got no complaints. I'm with the club I want to be with."

Ridley stopped 37 shots as Pittsburgh outshot Vancouver 40-26.

Ashton was thinking about something other than his third and fourth goals of the season in the Canucks' dressing room after the game. He hurt his knee on the last shift when he threw a check at a Penguin.

"I knew it was too good to be true," he moaned.

The knee is to be examined today to see if Ashton will be in the lineup Saturday against Detroit Red Wings.

Rick Martin, Craig Ramsay and Richie Dunn scored Buffalo goals during a 2:45 span early in the second period as the Sabres extended their consecutive-game winning streak to six. They have won nine of their last 10 while the Flames lost for the fourth straight time.

Steve Payne and Tim Young each scored twice as Minnesota snapped a five-game winless streak that had included three ties. Payne added two assists to go along with his 18th and 19th goals of the season against Oilers.

Vaclav Nedomansky snapped a 2-2 tie in the second period and later added a goal and two assists to extend Detroit's unbeaten streak to five.

Nadig wins again

VAL D'ISERE, France (CP) — Marie-Therese Nadig, Switzerland's former Olympic champion, won the giant slalom of the season's first World Cup ski meet today, her second win in two days.

The 25-year-old Swiss girl, who won two gold medals at the 1972 Winter Olympics, beat her closest rival, Perrine Pelen of France, by 0.22 seconds to win the first of the two slalom heats, but finished 7-100ths of a second behind in the second heat. She was the over-all winner with an aggregate time of two minutes 45.09 seconds.

Nadig won Wednesday's downhill race and, with her double triumph, took first place in the combined result to win extra points in the World Cup competition.

Another Swiss girl, Erika Hess, placed third in each of the two heats to finish third over all in 2:45.85, to Miss Pelen's 2:45.24.

The best-placed Canadian was Kathy Kreiner of Timmins, Ont., who placed 52nd in a time of 2:58.10. Laurie Graham of Inglewood, Ont., who placed third in Wednesday's downhill, was 60th in the slalom with a time of 2:59.94, a second behind Martine Lesieur of Trois-Rivieres, Que. who placed 58th.

Chris McCready of Jasper, Alta., 62nd in 3:00.20 and Marie Dufresne of Trois-Rivieres 63rd in 3:01.06.

Nadig earned the maximum of 75 points in the World Cup for the downhill, the giant slalom and the combined results of the two.

Wenzel, sixth in the downhill and fifth in the giant slalom, placed second in the combined results and was second in the World Cup standings with 41 points.

Podborski quick

VAL D'ISERE, France (CP) — Steve Podborski of Toronto posted the fastest time in today's final training runs for Friday's first men's World Cup downhill ski race with a time of of two minutes 1.67 seconds.

Money problems hit McLaren team

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — The British-based Team McLaren, one of the most successful outfits in championship automobile racing in the 1970s, is closing its U. S. operation for the 1980 season because of a lack of money, says team manager Tyler Alexander.

"We haven't been able to find the necessary sponsors, so we won't be Indy-car racing in 1980," Tyler said. "We're selling our cars, but we're storing all our equipment with the hope we can run here again."

Aussies, West Indies battle to test draw

BRISBANE (AP) — The first cricket test between Australia and the West Indies ended in a draw on Wednesday.

At the close on the final day, the West Indies were 40 for three wickets in their second innings after a first innings total of 441.

Australian captain Greg Chappell declared Australia's innings closed at 448 for six wickets after almost two days at the crease, leaving the West Indies the impossible target of 276 runs to win in just over an hour.

Pakistan takes command

NEW DELHI (Reuter) — Pakistan as in a commanding position against India in the second cricket test today after reaching 197 for four in its second innings for an over-all lead of 344 after three days play.

Pakistan bowled out India for 126 within six minutes of the start of play Thursday.

The test resumes Saturday.

Vikettes risk mark against U.S. team

University of Victoria Vikettes put an impressive record on the line Saturday while facing Seattle of the Amateur Athletic Union in an exhibition women's basketball game at McKinnon Gymnasium.

Game time is 8 p.m.

Vikettes are on top of the national collegiate rankings with a 15-0 record, including 6-0 in the Canada West University Athletic Association.

And UVic coach Kathy Shields will be missing two big guns from her lineup.

Carol Turney-Loos and Luanne Hebb are in Guelph, Ont., where they're training with the national team and are expected to take part in an international tournament.

But they'll both be back in uniform when Vikettes compete against some of the top Canadian talent at Regina's Queen City Classic tournament Dec. 27-30 and the McGill Invitational in Montreal, Jan. 3-5.

Vikettes will, however, miss the talent of forward Jamie Mackie for the balance of the season. Mackie underwent an operation earlier this week to repair ligament damage.

Shields expects to start Sue Shaw in place of Mackie and anticipates some changes as a result.

"We may have to alter our style," she explained. "Jamie was our small, quick forward. We'll miss her mobility."

Dinosaurs win

CALGARY (CP) — Jerry Farwell and Terry Kryczk combined for 46 saves Wednesday night as University of Calgary Dinosaurs defeated the Canadian Olympic team 4-1 in an exhibition hockey game.

U.S. bowlers collect women's team crown

The American team came up with a combined 2,747 in the last three games to capture the second gold medal in this quadrennial tournament sponsored by the International Bowling Federation.

West Germany clinched the silver medal with 5,577, while Australia's 5,487 was good for the bronze.

The Canadian team which had been third after Wednesday's competition fell to 10th with a total score of 5,344.

Soviets end fast, Canada gets berth

Times News Services

FORT WORTH, Tex. — The Soviet Union dethroned Japan for the first time in 20 years of men's gymnastics by winning the team gold medal with a spectacular display of strength, skill and grace at the world gymnastics championships Wednesday night.

The Soviet men shed tears and hugged each other upon taking the honor with a total standing of 587.50 out of a perfect 600. They had lost to the Japanese by only fractions of a point at the 1976 Montreal Olympics and last year's world championships in Strasbourg, France.

And Canada accomplished what it had sought at these championships — a berth in the Moscow Olympics next summer.

But Wednesday night belonged to the Soviets who finished almost four points ahead of the Japanese, who had 583.70.

"This did not come as a great surprise to us," Soviet coach Leonid Arkiev told a news conference. "We did not think about victory before the competition. It would have dissipated our strength."

At the same news conference, Japanese coach Kazuo Abe said: "The Soviets performed better. [illegible] our best. We will analyse the results carefully and learn."

The United States finished third with 581.15 points.

Canada, which came here ranked 14th, finished 11th with 562.30, five-one-hundredths of a point behind Czechoslovakia. The top 12 teams qualified for the Olympics.

The Canadian team was comprised of Philip Delasalle of Victoria, Warren Long of Vancouver, Jean Choquette and Pierre Clavel, both of Montreal, Dan Gaudet of Toronto and Mark Eprecht of Cambridge, Ont.

Delasalle was Canada's top individual performer, standing 25th over-all, followed by Long, 45th, 113.50; Choquette, 61st, 112.15; Clavel, 86th, 110.40; Gaudet 92nd, 109.90, and Eprecht, 112th, 107.55.

The audience worked itself into a frenzy during the late night session when the six top men's teams competed simultaneously in their six optional events.

The crowd saw two near-perfect 9.95 scores and six 9.9s in the floor exercises alone. The Soviets did triple forward somersaults followed immediately by several quick backward handsprings.

The last time the Soviets beat the Japanese was in the 1960 Olympics at Rome and at the world championships in Moscow in 1958.

Nikolai Andrianov of the Soviet Union, over-all gold medallist at the last championships and Olympics, got a 9.95 in the vault and 9,9 on the floor.

But on the horizontal bar, he swung in the wrong direction out of a handstand with hands behind his shoulders. His backward rather than forward giant circle cost him dearly — only a 9.1 score — and the chance to defend his championship.

Andrianov, called the "grandaddy of gymnastics" at age 27, managed only eighth place at 116.80 in the individual standings but his colleague, Alexandre Ditiatin, was the highest scorer overall at 118.10 out of a perfect 120 following the men's team optionals and compulsories.

Second-highest scorer was Kurt Thomas of the U.S. with 117.75, followed by Soviets Alexandre Tkachev at 117.65 and Vladimir Markelove at 117.15.

Women compete today in their team optional exercises. The leading over-all scorer — Nadia Comaneci of Romania — was expected to participate despite being treated in a hospital overnight for a hand infection.

A hospital spokesman said Comaneci was being treated for a minor hand infection and was admitted only as a precautionary measure.

"Doctors fully expect her to compete," the spokesman said.

As with the men's optionals, the strong women's teams are grouped in the late night session.

max low

Though he's no longer a boy, Victoria's Garnet Moen has realized the dream of every soccer-playing youngster in British Columbia. He has just signed a professional contract to play in the North American Soccer League.

By the time you read this, in fact, the 25-year-old Garnet will already be in his new home of Boston, where he will play for the New England Tea Men, first in a six-a-side indoor winter league and then kicking off in the NASL proper in April.

The signing came after a tryout in Toronto for him and fellow-Victorian David McCaig and a 10-day trial for Garnet in Boston.

Garnet was back in town last weekend, watching his Victoria West clubmates being held to a 3-3 tie by Athletics in the Vancouver Island Soccer League's first division and packing for his move east. He left early Tuesday and plays his first game for the Tea Men in the 12,000-seat Providence Civic Centre Friday night.

"It's six-a-side — a goalie and five players out — and they're playing it the same as hockey," Garnet explained in a hasty interview just before he took off.

"Indoor soccer is a brand new thing for the Tea Men, who are owned by Lipton's," he added. "But they're doing it to get fan interest and it's popular with NASL regulars. Bob Bolitho, Bob Lenarduzzi and Buzz Parsons (Canadian players with the Vancouver Whitecaps) have all gone on loan to Los Angeles to play six-a-side."

With scouts eyeing 16 and 17-year-olds, 25 seems a trifle late to embark on a pro career but Garnet Moen said his soccer life has been reborn.

Born in Victoria and educated at Vic High, where he played on the soccer team, Garnet joined the Athletics but after three years with them he switched to the Wests. With both clubs he was on teams which captured Canadian championships.

"Being a pro soccer player was always something I had in the back of my mind that I wanted to do," he explained. "I had always played midfield and this season my coach Bob English put me at centre-forward, and I enjoyed it being up front.

"Suddenly I became inspired — from playing in the Canadians and through Bob helping me, I guess — and I wanted to prove I could play professional."

Of course, it helped having a coach who had once played for Manchester United in the English League's first division with Tea Men coach Noel Cantwell.

"I was offered a contract by Toronto but Bob sent me down to Boston to see if I could get something better," Garnet said. "They liked me and offered me a one-year contract."

Feeling the offer — and the chance it gave him to see if he could make it in the big time — looked pretty good, Garnet gave up his job in salvage work with Seaspan International and signed on the dotted line.

After a couple of months playing indoors in Boston, he will leave with the rest of the Tea Men in February for a month of training in Florida for the spring opening of the NASL.

Standing six foot, one inch and weighing in at 180 pounds, Garnet believes the Tea Men, trying for a better goal average than they had last year, will use him at centre forward.

GARNET MOEN
. . . first action Friday

"Now, there are more opportunities for Canadian and U.S. players as they've changed the rule they had last year which said a team had to have at least two North American-born players on the field at all times," Garnet pointed out. "This season clubs have to have three North American players on the field.

"I read the other day that there are 20 B.C. players in the NASL," Garnet said. "I couldn't believe it — 20!" Then he grinned.

"There's 21 now . . ."

Commissioner Bowie Kuhn made the announcement at the annual winter meetings, saying the project fulfilled one of his long-time hopes.

Kuhn said the travelling exhibit will be sponsored by Gillette, a firm that has conducted the all-star selections since 1970.

Company spokesman Samuel Schell said the firm would spend about $200,000 underwriting the exhibit to be shown at shopping malls around the United States.

Flyers, who rallied in the third period for the win after trailing by period scores of 3-2 and 5-3, moved into sole possession of second place — one point ahead of the Trios.

Tony St. Denis scored the other Flyer goal while Joe Miller, Andy Turner, Ken Buna, Paul Hughes and Lane Crockett counted for Oak Bay.

Non-Olympic sports get world games

PARIS (AP) — Jacques Delcourt, president of the World Karate Federation, has announced the organization of the first world games of non-Olympic sports, scheduled for July and August, 1981, in Santa Clara, Calif.

The presidents of all international non-Olympic sports federations will meet in Seoul, South Korea, in May to work out the details, Delcourt said.

He said Lord Killanin, president of the International Olympic Committee, considers the non-Olympic sports movement an excellent idea for promoting sports that have practically no chance for recognition by the IOC.

Dorsch quits Riders

REGINA (CP) — The president of the Saskatchewan Roughriders of the Canadian Football League says team general-manager Henry Dorsch has resigned.

Gord Staseson said that the decision to resign was Dorch's. The club will interview three candidates for the job, including Joe Tiller, assistant general-manager of Calgary Stampeders.

Dorsch played for the Roughriders between 1964 and 1971 and became general-manager early in 1978.

The Roughriders won only two games in the 1979 season and finished at the bottom of the Western Conference of the CFL. They lost $393,000 because of poor attendance and the cost of hiring replacements for injured players.

Liverpool in semi-finals

NORWICH, England (Reuter) — Liverpool advanced to the semi-finals of England's soccer League Cup when it beat Norwich 3-1 Wednesday night.

The three other quarter-finals ended in draws Tuesday night and will be replayed next week.

Blue Jays trade Chambliss

TORONTO (AP) — What has been a rather dull gathering of baseball brass at their annual winter meetings held promise of producing some interesting moments before the gavel sent everyone home.

On today's agenda of American League club owners was a proposal The Associated Press has learned would guarantee visiting teams $10,000 a game, rather than the present arrangement of a 20-per-cent cut of the gate receipts.

The measure apparently was directed at Charles Finley, whose Oakland A's drew the smallest attendance in the majors this year.

However, it would also present problems for other clubs which do not draw well because of bad weather in the early spring or late in the season when home teams are out of the race.

"If they draw only a couple of thousand at the gate, how are they going to pay $10,000 to the visiting team?" asked one baseball official.

It was learned that Kansas City Royals originally proposed a $5,000 guarantee, but other clubs, upset at Finley's inability to sell the A's so the team could be moved, raised the proposed amount to $10,000.

One team official said visiting clubs averaged only $2,992 per game in Oakland last season.

Before the proposal became a topic of gossip in corridors and lobbies, the big news was the trade of first baseman Chris Chambliss by Toronto Blue Jays to Atlanta Braves in a five-player transaction.

However, the trade failed to start any chain reaction. There still was a great deal of talking, but little action. Major league brass continued playing games, determined to avoid any mistakes with the inter-league trading deadline drawing closer — midnight Friday night.

"I don't know of anything really hot," said Boston Red Sox general manager Haywood Sullivan, who turned to Seattle Mariners in search of a left-handed pitcher. "However, I think there still may be some trades, although intricate ones.

"What trades are in the works, with both sides serious, will be made here. Everyone trying to deal would like to get things out of the way. If not, I don't think much will be done again until the inter-league trading reopens in the spring."

"This is crazy," one baseball executive said. "Everyone's talking, but little is being accomplished. It all comes down to fear of getting burned."

"You have to check out every player involved in a trade," said Montreal Expos general manager Jim Fanning. "There are too many factors. A player can be signed to a multi-year contract, but if you get him, he can spend one season with you and then, if unhappy for some reason, can demand to be traded."

California Angels signed veteran shortstop Fred Patek as a free-agent draftee from Kansas City and sent shortstop Jim Anderson, 22, to Seattle to complete a deal made earlier this year for pitcher John Montague.

Patek, 35, was given a three-year contract by the Angels, who had been reluctant to give up Anderson as the player to be named later in the deal for Montague.

Canadian squad third

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — The American women showed the men how to bowl Wednesday in the opening round of the teams of five at the ninth bowling world championships.

Cincy Schuble, Sandi Tice, Betty Maw, Jackie Stormo and Annese Kelly of the U. S. teamed up for a record 2,920 series to take a 133-pin lead over second-place West Germany in women's action.

The best men's score of the day was a 2,915 by first-place Australia.

Teams in the best positions to overtake the American women include West Germany, 2,787, third-place Canada, 2,762, and fourth-place Denmark, 2,756.

Joanne Walker of Montreal paced the Canadians with 614. Lillian Hilton of Edmonton scored 558, Shirley Hofman of Burlington, Ont., 551, Cathy Townsend of Montreal 524 and Irene Joyal of Winnipeg 515. The Canadians had two strong first games with 943 and 967 totals but slipped in the third to 852.

The American women obliterated the old team series record of 2,871 set by Australia in 1975. The final U.S. game of 1,008 was also a new mark, one pin more than the Aussie record in 1975. Stormo set the pace with a 604 series.

The Australian men rolled games of 954, 959 and 1,002 en route to first place. Eric Thompson, who won the doubles earlier in the tournament with Ron Powell, was the scoring star with 603.

The Netherlands rolled a 2,869 series to take second place and Venezuela moved into third with 2,864.

The Philippines, which had dominated the early days of the tournament by winning gold medals in men's and women's singles as well as women's doubles faltered in the five-person events.

The weary Boston Celtics were done in Wednesday night by a pair of streakers.

Tom McMillen scored 14 of his 18 points in the second period and John Drew added all of his 22 in the second half as Atlanta Hawks whipped Boston 120-92, handing the Celtics their first home loss of the National Basketball Association season.

The Hawks, leaders in the Central Division, pulled away to a comfortable 21-point halftime advantage over the Celtics, leaders in the East.

Drew, the Hawks' leading scorer with a 21.5 average, sat out most of the first half after drawing three personal fouls in the first four minutes. In the second half, he penerated the fatigued Celtic defence — spent after an overtime victory Tuesday night in Detroit — for five field goals in 10 attempts, and converted 12 foul shots.

Elsewhere, Philadelphia '76ers downed San Antonio Spurs 132-120, New York Knicks edged Washington Bullets 107-104, New Jersey Nets beat Phoenix Suns 115-100, Seattle SuperSonics dumped Utah Jazz 115-96, Kansas City Kings defeated Detroit Pistons 109-93, Indiana Pacers tripped Cleveland Cavaliers 118-99, Denver Nuggets blasted Milwaukee Bucks 123-107, Golden State Warriors got past Chicago Bulls 97-90 and Los Angeles Lakers nipped Houston Rockets 116-114.

Darryl Dawkins shattered a backboard for the second time this season with a high-powered dunk shot as Philadelphia posted its seventh straight victory. The crowd saw Dawkins smash the glass backboard with 6:42 left in the game, to give the '76ers a 110-99 lead. It was the 14th point of 20 scored by the muscular 22-year-old centre, who weighs 252 pounds and stands 6-foot-11½.

With centre Jack Sikma and his replacement Tom LaGarde shutting off Utah's inside game, Seattle grabbed an early 11-point lead, then withstood a fourth-quarter challenge.

BROUGHT TO HIS KNEES trying to return shot by Jimmy Connors was Tim Gullikson (above) of Flordia. Upset conquerer of Illie Nastase in first round, Gullikson suffered first loss in Tennis Challenge Cup competition in Montreal Wednesday by losing 6-3, 6-3 to favored Connors. (CP Wirephoto).

Connors concentrates on climb back to top

Times News Services

Being No.2 isn't good enough for Jimmy Connors of the United States, who defeated fellow countryman Tim Gullikson 6-3, 6-3 in his opening match at the $320,000 World Championship Tennis Challenge Cup in Montreal on Wednesday.

"I've been the best in the world, and I will be again," said Connors, who lost the No. 1 world ranking to Sweden's Bjorn Borg in April.

In other matches in the eight-man tournament, Hans Gildemeister of Chile defeated South Africa's Johan Kriek 6-2, 7-5, taking a giant step toward the semifinals, which will be played Saturday.

Romanian Ilie Nastase evened his record at 1-1, defeating American Peter Fleming 6-3, 7-5 in a matchup of ill-tempered players.

The eight players are divided into two groups of four in the split round-robin tournament, with the top two in each section advancing to the semi-finals.

The highlight of the evening for the 4,500 fans at the Maurice Richard Arena was the Connors-Gullikson duel.

Gullikson had been impressive in his victory over Nastase on Tuesday, and Connors is always an attraction despite the decline in his play this year.

"I've had a lot of other things on my mind," said Connors of his problems on the court.

Connors married former model Patti McGuire last year and the couple had a son Aug. 1, creating a change in his lifestyle.

"But I'm a lot more used to my son now," Connors said. "I know when I leave him he's in good hands."

Now that his concentration on tennis has been restored, he said, "I may be tough to beat in 1980."

Nastase clowned through the first set, but lived up to his tempermental reputation in the second. He and Fleming put on a display of poor sportsmanship, with Nastase flinging balls at linesmen and Fleming slamming his racket to the ground in fits of temper.

Between tantrums, however, the two managed to play some excellent tennis, with Nastase rebounding from a 4-2 deficit in games in the second set to sweep the young Ameriean.

ALSO IN TENNIS: Arthur Ashe remained in a Jacksonville, Fla., hospital as doctors performed more tests to determine the nature of chest discomfort the athlete felt Tuesday . . . a hospital spokesman said Ashe continues to feel well and is up walking around, and should be released sometime today . . . And in Sydney, Australia, second-seeded Billie Jean King was blasted out of the $100,000 Women's Classic by big-serving Betty Ann Stuart 7-5, 6-4 . . . Wednesday's match was one King could not afford to lose . . . She had to reach the quarter-finals and beat Czechoslovakia's Regina Marsikova to qualify for the $250,000 women's series final in Washington D.C. next month . . . Stuart will play Marsikova, the No. 7 seed, in the quarter-finals . . . The classic has now lost its top two seeds, King and Evonne Goolagong Cawley, who was forced to withdraw Tuesday because of illness.

Shoplifting boxers banned from sports

BUDAPEST, Hungary (AP) — Four Hungarian boxers have been banned from all sports activities for the next five to 10 years by the boxing association's disciplinary committee as a result of a shoplifting conviction handed out by a London magistrate last month.

Janos Bakos, Karoly Becsei, Laszlo Pem and Pal Totka were members of the Hungarian national team that met the English squad in London.

The four were caught shoplifting in a self-serve store with 42 pounds worth of goods and sentenced by a magistrate to a 550-pound fine.

The boxing association paid the fine, and the four now have to pay it back. Becsei and Totka were each banned from sports activities for 10 years, Bakos for seven and Pem for five.

Two jockeys hurt in four-horse spill

TORONTO (CP) — Jockeys Jim Standring and Larry Buzit were injured Wednesday in a four-horse spill in the first race at Greenwood Raceway.

Standring suffered a fractured left hip and Buzit a fractured right kneecap. They were taken to Toronto East General Hospital.

The spill occurred when Standring's mount Fool's Desire clipped the heels of Tricky Reply, who was in second place when the field of 12 came off the final turn into the homestretch.

Fool's Desire fell heavily, throwing Standring to the track. On The Bid, with Buzit aboard, attempted to leap the fallen rider and horse, but Buzit was pitched over his horse's head.

Twistalong, with apprentice Marty Mercieca aboard, couldn't avoid the spill and somersaulted over Fool's Desire, throwing Mercieca over its head. Starfalla, with apprentice Brian Clair aboard, also couldn't avoid Fool's Desire as the filly struggled to regain her feet and the impact sent Starfalla and Clair sprawling, too.

Clair and Mercieca were bruised and shaken from the spill and cancelled their remaining mounts. The horses were cut and bruised, but not seriously injured.

Jet set to go formal

WINNIPEG (CP) — It will be a black tie affair Dec. 15 when Winnipeg Jets play host to defending Stanley Cup champion Montreal Canadiens in a National Hockey League game.

The 50 Winnipeg arena employees will wear tuxedos and spectators also are being encouraged to dress formally for the game, to be televised by the CBC.

The idea has won support from at least one Winnipeg city councillor.

"Everybody thinks of Winnipeg as a hick town and we want to provide the image that Winnipeg people have class," said Councillor Jim Ernst.

Earthquakes may be sold

SAN JOSE, Calif. (AP) — San Jose Earthquakes may be sold this week for $3 million, says the North American Soccer League team's general manager.

"Our owners are in the final stages of coming to terms on an offer for the club," general manager Ben Reichmuth said. "If the Earthquakes are sold, it will be an absolute buyout by a syndicate. Tony Kovac, Bob Himsl and the 12 limited partners we have will get out entirely."

Scramble on again for NHL players

CALGARY (CP) — Canada Selects, who will compete in the Izvestia hockey tournament in Moscow beginning Dec. 16, are scrambling to find National Hockey League players for the team, says general manager Bill Watters.

"Last year, Izvestia was a total NHL commitment," he said in a telephone interview from Toronto. "Each team had to give up one player. This year, it isn't, and I'm having to rely on my personal relationship with the general managers."

The Selects are to be made up of eight players from the Canadian Olympic hockey team, two from the University of Toronto team and the rest from the NHL.

NHL general managers "know it's beneficial to their players to play internationally, but in the same breath they can't rape themselves," said Watters, who has managed Izvestia teams in the past.

Final NHL selections would be made Monday, the same day the team leaves for two exhibition games in Finland.

Watters confirmed that several professionals have been committed to the team. They include centre Wayne Dillon of Winnipeg Jets, goalie Rick St. Croix of Philadelphia Flyers (now with Maine Mariners of the American Hockey League) and winger Steve Tambellini of New York Islanders.

Watters said Paul Henderson, hero of the 1972 Summit Series, gave him an oral commitment to play, but his team, Birmingham Bulls of the Central League, is refusing to allow the winger to head oversees.

Defenceman Dale Tallon of Pittsburgh Penguins (now with Syracuse Firebirds of the AHL) was also being considered.

"Part of the problem is the fact the NHL just doesn't have the depth this year," said Watters. "There have been just too many injuries."

Olympic representatives on the Selects are: Randy Gregg, Warren Anderson, Stelio Zupancich, Carey Farelli, Dan D'Alvise, Dave Hindmarch, John Devaney and Kevin Primeau.

Brad Tamblyn and Geoff Shaw are the University of Toronto players.

Walton returned to active roster

SAN DIEGO (AP) — San Diego Clippers of the National Basketball Association returned centre Bill Walton to the active roster.

Walton, who has not played this season because of foot problems, is not expected to see action for at least another month.

Read, Podborski flash speed in practice

VAL D'ISERE, France (CP) — Ken Read of Calgary and Steve Podborski of Toronto posted the second and third best times in Wednesday's practice runs for Friday's opening World Cup men's downhill ski race.

Eric Haaker of Norway topped the training runs, posting a time of 2:01.70. Read's time was 2:03.05 while Podborski clocked 2:03.12.

Austria's Franz Klammer had the ninth best time at 2:04.11 while team-mate Peter Wirnsberger was fourth behind Podborski.

Proportionate scholarship share must go to women

WASHINGTON (AP) — The federal department of health, education and welfare said Tuesday it will require colleges in the United States to either give women athletes their proportional share of scholarships or face federal action for violating a law against sex discrimination.

But HEW secretary Patricia Roberts Harris, in a major revision to the guidelines previously proposed for a section of law called Title IX, said colleges will not be required to equalize per-capita spending on male and female athletic teams.

If 70 per cent of a college's athletes are male, they are entitled to 70 per cent of the scholarship aid, but women must get 30 per cent, she said.

Under the guidelines proposed a year ago by Harris's predecessor, Joseph A. Califano Jr., colleges would have been forced to provide a proportionate share of their total athletic spending for women athletes.

Harris said that under her new guidelines, colleges still must "make athletic benefits available in an equitable way" to women, but they need not be identical to the support given men's teams.

Harris called the new policy interpretation "a sensible, flexible policy that clearly provides colleges and universities with the guidance they requested on how to comply with the athletic provisions of Title IX."

Starry rugby field

Bruce Howe, coach of the University of Victoria Vikings, has gathered up quite a field for the inaugural University of Victoria International Universities Rugby Tournament to be held Mar. 13-15 at UVic.

The two-division, double round-robin tourney features sides from Auckland University, Brigham Young University, University of British Columbia, University of California at Berkeley, University of California at Los Angeles, University of Exeter, York University and UVic.

"We are excited about the quality of the tournament," explained Howe. "The California sides represent the top two American university teams while Canada's best, UBC and UVic, will complement university powers from New Zealand and Britain."

Britain picks skating team

LONDON (AP) — Karena Richardson, 20, who has regained the British figure skating title, is the only women's singles contestant on the British skating team for the Winter Olympics at Lake Placid, N.Y., and the world championships at Dortmund in March.

Robin Cousins, one of Britain's brightest hopes for an Olympic gold medal, will be accompanied at the Games by 18-year-old Chris Howarth. Robert Daw and Susan Garland will represent Britain in the pairs.

NHL under-age policy jeopardizes players seeking scholarships

TORONTO (CP) — The National Hockey League's decision to sign under-age juniors has jeopardized the chances of most players in the Canadian Major Junior Hockey League to gain hockey scholarships at American colleges and universities, a spokesman for the National Collegiate Athletic Association, said Tuesday.

"Under NCAA rules, if a player signs a professional contract and receives compensation to joon a professsional team, but returns to an amateur club, he, in effect, professionalizes that team," said Tom Yeager, an enforcement officer with the NCAA, governing body for sports at major U.S. colleges and universities.

When the NHL decided to include under-age players (those under 20) in its entry draft last August, it did so with the provision that a player could be returned to his junior club if he played fewer than 10 NHL games.

In addition, NHL clubs signed, as free agents, 31 juniors who were eligible for the entry draft but not picked. These players received as much as $25,000 to sign NHL contracts and have been left with their junior clubs for the 1979-80 season.

Under-players signed to professional contracts were returned to at least 20 of the CMJHL's 34 teams, thus affecting most Canadian major-junior players who might otherwise have entertained scholarship offers from U.S. colleges.

The CMJHL is comprised of the Quebec Major Junior Hockey League, the Ontario Major Junior Hockey League and the Western Hockey League.

Yeager said the NCAA rules forbidding amateurs from playing with professionals will be strictly enforced.

"It's an NCAA violation," he added. "If any player is participating on a team with a player who has signed a professional contract and is aware that that player has signed a contact, then the player automatically jeopardizes his college eligibility."

A spokesman for the Amateur Hockey Association of the United States said Tuesday that about 40 per cent of college players on the 33 teams comprising the Division I hockey program in the U.S. are Canadians, and that as many as 15 players a year join U.S. college teams from CMJHL ranks.

CMJHL chairman Ed Chynoweth, a longtime critic of the NHL's treatment of junior hockey, called the situation "just another in a never-ending series of slaps to the system."

"Let the NHL add this to its under-age bonanza," he added.

Old trophy goes to hockey 'hall'

TORONTO (CP) — A 65-year-old hockey trophy from Calgary has made its way to the Hockey Hall of Fame after 61 years in retirement.

The D. C. Coleman Trophy was presented to the late Dr. J. L. Gibson in Calgary about 1914. Jim Leadh, a grandson of Gibson, this week returned the silver trophy to sports columnist Jim Coleman, son of the late D. C. Coleman, a former chairman and president of Canadian Pacific Railways and former vice-president of the National Hockey League Montreal Canadiens.

Completing the informal ceremony, Coleman handed the trophy over the Lefty Reid, curator of the Hockey Hall of Fame where Gibson is an honored member.

The trophy was presented by D. C. Coleman for competition in The Mercantile Hockey League of Calgary and after an army team known as the 78th Battery won it three years in a row, it was, by an old tradition, permanently retired.

Gibson, who died in 1955, was also captain of the Portage Lake team of Houghton, Mich., which beat Montreal Wanderers twice in 1904, the year before the Wanderers won the Stanley Cup.

Opening lead — seven of spades.

Roy Fox, of Kansas, and Paul Swanson, of West Virginia, won the 1979 national men's pair championship, and here is one of the hands that were instrumental in achieving the victory.

As West, Fox opened one heart and Swanson responded one spade. Eventually, after Fox made two cuebids, Swanson bid six spades. Whether he would have made the slam is by no means certain, but the issue became academic after North bid seven clubs as a sacrifice.

The East-West defence was devastating. To begin with, Fox underled the ace of spades! It did not take Swanson long to figure out, after winning the first trick with the queen of spades, what his sly partner was up to. He returned the three of diamonds at trick two.

Fox trumped and then played the ace and another heart to dummy's king. The slaughter continued when Swanson ruffed and led another diamond. Fox trumped again, led the jack of spades to his partner's king, and Swanson then delivered the coup de grace by leading a third round of diamonds, ruffed by Fox with the king of trumps.

So the outcome was that South went down seven — 1,300 points — as a result of the high-class defence. Oddly enough, declarer lost four trump tricks — as well as two spades and a heart — and there was nothing he could do about it.

North's seven club bid was poorly judged. He had promising defensive values — the king of hearts behind the heart bidder, only five diamonds to the K-J-10, and only four clubs. He should have reasoned that his opponents were probably skating on thin ice, and that there was much more to lose than to gain by bidding seven clubs. Had North passed six spades, he might very well have ended plus 100 points, instead of suffering a huge loss.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Establish claims—get property and other appraisals. Cancer, Capricorn, Aquarius natives play key roles. Check directions, instructions. Older individual lends benefit of experience. Be receptive; don't permit pride to block progress.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Make inquiries, expand base of operation, attend social affair. Elements of timing and luck combine to result in financial gain. Be flexible, read between lines of message dispatched by relative. Another Gemini and a Sagittarian figure prominently.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Major adjustment at home, within family circle is spotlighted. Taurus, Libra, Scorpio natives figure in scenario. Lunar position emphasizes hospitals, institutions, large organizations. A "psychic" impression proves valid.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. [illegible]): [illegible] learn truth about friendship—or lack of it. One who wants to "split hairs" [illegible] something of nothing. Know it and respond accordingly. Some of your romantic illusions undergo transformation—and this is ultimately to your advantage.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Go slow, maintain low profile. Defer to wishes of partner, mate. Check legal rights, permissions. Gather information, realize that patience now is your ally. You learn by teaching—share knowledge, know that recent disappointment is actually minor.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Avoid direct confrontations. Accept invitation to social affair. Display artistic talents, versatility. Popularity increases if you are flexible. Gemini, Sagittarius natives play key roles. Expand recreational facilities.

IF DECEMBER 7 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are philosophical, spiritual and have tendency to be your own worst critic. Pisces, Virgo persons play important roles in your life. You are finished with a burden which was not rightfully your own in first place. July can be your most memorable month of 1980. You are preparing now for new starts in new directions, added independence of thought and action. People are drawn to you with their problems—you are better at helping others than when it comes to aiding yourself. Strive to obtain greater balance along these lines.

Mystery car still sought

Police are still looking for a mystery car that caused a fatal accident at Langford on Oct. 26, an inquest was told Wednesday night.

Pathologist Dr. Bruce Hay said Gerald Littlejohn, 53, died of a crushed chest and rupture of the heart.

Thomas Hannigan, 45, of 940 Garthland, said he was driving an empty Wiseway Transportation Ltd. bus south on the Trans-Canada Highway when a car, possibly a 1965 Meteor, started to pull on to the highway from Spencer Road.

He said he was about 100 feet from the intersection at the time.

He braked quickly and blew his horn, but the car didn't stop.

Hannigan said he braked three or four times before the rear end of the bus started to "come around" across the centreline. The highway was slick with rain.

The bus struck two cars, one driven by Littlejohn, the other by William Morgan Phillips, 2920 Mount Wells Drive.

Hannigan said the mystery car had a light bottom and a dark vinyl top.

"The car certainly didn't stop," he said.

He said it drove south and turned on to Brock Road.

Constable Dennis Parsons of Colwood RCMP said Littlejohn was wearing a seatbelt but no shoulder harness.

He said the search for the mystery car is still on.

Phillips, who had been behind Littlejohn coming from Victoria, and Robert Loudon, 3422 Hazelwood, who was following the bus, both said they did not see any vehicle enter the highway in front of the bus.

The inquest resumes tonight.

Handicap access study set

A full-scale study of the problems handicapped people have in gaining access to city hall was commissioned today by Victoria's public works committee.

The committee had considered installing a wheelchair ramp which would allow access to council chambers but aldermen expanded the study to include all of city hall.

City engineer John Sansom said a ramp between differing levels in the old city hall building and the new addition "would completely spoil the architectural transition from the old to the new building."

He said his department was studying the installation of a small elevator at a cost of $10,000 to $15,000 which would be installed on the steps themselves and tucked out of the way when not in use.

Sansom said wheelchair visitors would need personal help for access to other areas of the city hall.

Chinatown fix-up flap

Aldermen Frank Carson and Robin Blencoe questioned the $790,000 bill for putting wiring underground in the 500-block Fisgard .

Carson, chairman of council's finance committee, and Blencoe said the estimate seemed high for just one block but the committee later approved the city's share of $263,000.

City manager Jim Bramley said it "seems a heck of a lot since we did the whole south end of Government for $3 million."

"I'm just astounded," said Blencoe.

He said it is hard to believe the city can't find $16,000 to put a couple of street workers in the downtown area to work with youth when three quarters of a million is available for the wiring job.

"I've got to shake my head."

The total cost of the wiring project will be shared three ways. B.C. Hydro and B.C. Telephone have agreed to pay a third, the city will pay another third and the provincial government will pay the final third under the provisions of the Power and Telephone Line Beautification Fund Act.

Ald. Ron McKenzie said the underground wiring is the key to the whole Chinatown revitalization project.

City comptroller Mason Sheldrick noted the city will also pay another $160,000 beyond its share of the wiring project for other items in the project.

This includes landscaping, decorative sidewalks, street furniture, and the main item, the Gate of Harmonious Interest at Fisgard and Government.

McKenzie noted that if the city decides to back out in the next two or three months it still can but Bramley said as soon as the tenders for the wiring job come in — they are due Dec. 12 — the money is committed.

"We're not giving away our right to scrutinize the tenders," Carson said, as the committee approved the tentative cost estimates for putting the wiring underground.

Speakers eye $500 in aid

Student speakers in an oratorical program that concluded this week at View Royal Elementary School will be eligible for a $500 scholarship and a chance at international competition.

Eighteen students who took part in the Optimists International public speaking program in evening sessions received certificates from Toastmasters, the local sponsor, and are eligible to compete in a "speak-off" next spring in competition with other elementary schools.

The district winner will go to a regional competition to be held in the U.S.

Participants in the event must be under 16 to ensure that the experience will be of help in their development during their remaining years at school.

Meanwhile eight secondary level students have taken debating awards in a tournament involving 12 public and private schools on south Vancouver Island.

Best affirmative speaker Peggy Kemp, of Stelly's, will represent the southern island in the Western Debating Championships at Winnipeg.

James Duffus, of St. Michael's University School, was named the top senior negative speaker.

Set up by agent, says ferry picket

VANCOUVER (CP) — A British Columbia Ferry Corp. employee testified Wednesday that he felt he was set up by a union business agent when he participated in an allegedly illegal walkout Sept. 6.

John Page told the B.C. Labor Relations Board that he thought Matt Brown of the B.C. Ferry and Marine Workers Union had set him up to be one of only three pickets in the unauthorized strike at the Horseshoe Bay terminal. He said he had seen Brown with picket signs the night before and had heard a radio report that contract negotiations had broken off, so he had no idea the strike was not authorized by the union executive.

Page was one of the last of two dozen witnesses called at the hearing into the firing of Bob Peacock, Horseshoe Bay local union recording secretary, and the two-week suspensions of two other union officials, Horseshoe Bay shop steward Lloyd Thornhill and Departure Bay terminal chairman Robin Holmgren.

A third suspension against Trevor Oram, union chairman on the ferry Queen of Prince Rupert, was lifted this week by the corporation.

The hearing, which began Nov. 15, wrapped up Wednesday except for final lawyers' arguments to be heard Dec. 20.

Brown, who is among a group of dissidents trying to wrest control of the union from the current leadership, admitted earlier in the hearing that he helped deliver picket signs, but he denied any prior knowledge of the wildcat strike.

Brown cannot be disciplined by the corporation because he is an employee of the union.

Holmgren and Pattie Broome, a Horseshoe Bay employee, have admitted responsibility in organizing the walkout.

Meanwhile, the union's two factions are battling it out with separate petitions — one calling for a special leadership convention and the other expressing confidence in the current leadership.

Under the union's constitution, the leadership must call a special convention if 30 per cent of the 2,700 members sign a petition, although there is argument as to whether it can legally be a leadership convention.

The dissident group, which includes Brown, Holmgren, Oram, Thornhill, and Peacock, wants a convention called before next April 15 to nominate candidates for a referendum ballot. Officers' two-year terms are not up until the next scheduled convention in February, 1981.

Union president Shirley Mathieson and first vice-president Andy McKechnie claim the constitution prohibits such a leadership convention and cannot be amended to allow for nomination of new officers in mid-term.

The ferry workers' problems led to a decision in October to conduct an internal investigation into alleged breaches of union policy and violations of the constitution. The inquiry, to be headed by Canadian Labor Congress representative Dick Larson, is yet to begin.

Skipper sues for libel

POWELL RIVER (CP) — Ferry Captain Gerry Stalling has sued Powell River News and its editor following his reinstatement last week.

The B.C. Labor Relations board ordered the B.C. Ferry Corp. to reinstate Stalling on Nov. 27 after an arbitration hearing into an incident Sept. 20, 1978, when a ferry skippered by Stalling slammed into the Saltery Bay dock near this community northwest of Vancouver.

The board accepted the captain's contention that the accident was caused by a mechanical failure and awarded him $30,000 in back pay.

Stalling now is suing the newspaper and editor Wendy Fitzgibbons, 32, for libel about a story published by the News (then called the Town Crier) five days after the accident which alleged Stalling was not on the bridge at the time of the incident. Testimony at the hearing placed the captain on the bridge and in control of the ferry at the time of the collision.

The board's decision reversed a corporation internal investigation that found Stalling responsible for the accident because he approached the dock too fast.

Stalling's case gained notoriety earlier this year when corporation officials asked the courts to cite Fitzgibbons for contempt because she would not disclose the sources for her story.

The B.C. Court of Appeal dismissed the application March 9, saying it had no jurisdiction in the matter.

The B.C. Ferry and Marine Workers' Union appealed Stalling's dismissal under the labor code.

The collision caused an estimated $500,000 damage.

The News has a circulation of 5,500 and is owned by Westpress Publications Ltd. of Winnipeg.

'Hot' threat if no report

The B.C. Federation of Labor will be asked to use its clout to force the provincial government to produce engineering reports on the Princess Marguerite.

But that intervention won't be sought for at least two weeks because a motion at Wednesday night's Victoria Labor Council meeting to take such action was confusing and had to be referred back to the executive for redrafting.

The motion will be brought up again Dec. 19.

The delegates agreed in principle that they should take action to get the reports released and threaten to slap a "hot" edict on any offshore ship brought in to replace the Marguerite if the reports are not made public.

"If they won't release the reports they must have something to hide," said Darrell Walker of the boilermakers union, who put forward the motion.

He said the reports will show that the ship is sound and he added the only reason the Socred administration wants to scrap the Marguerite is because "it was an NDP project."

The Marguerite was bought by the NDP during the years the party formed the government and kept on the Victoria-Seattle run after the CPR had decided to cancel the service.

Unions representing shipyard workers feel the Marguerite could be fixed up in local shipyards and kept on the popular run until a replacement can be built, also in a B.C. shipyard.

Boilermakers business agent Neil Hindle said it is time all trade union members and Victoria residents wrote to the government and let the Socreds know "we are fed up as unemployed people having our work exported off the continent."

Labor Council to publisher: No!

By MIKE HUGHES

Victoria Labor Council delegates don't want the publisher of Monday magazine speaking in his own defence at one of their meetings.

They made that perfectly clear Wednesday night when council president John Shields asked how they felt about inviting such people to the meetings to defend themselves against what they feel are inaccurate charges.

Shields said Monday publisher Gene Miller had asked to speak to the delegates and counter charges that he is a member of the so-called right-to-work movement.

Miller had been so tagged by labor leaders following articles in which the unionists felt leaders of the right-to-work group made inaccurate statements about unions affiliated to the labor council.

Last month, the council passed a motion recommending to the unions that they make use of the "organized" media for news releases and advertising.

"Such a policy should ideally preclude buying advertising in non-union media, distribution of public service announcements to them and insofar as possible, the granting of interviews to their staff," council secretary Larry Ryan explained in a letter to the unions.

The letter said Monday is a non-union shop and has its paper printed in one of the most anti-union shops on Vancouver Island.

Shields said Miller wants to explain to the delegates that he doesn't take a right-to-work position.

Shields also said there are reports that the labor council is going to boycott Monday magazine.

But none of the delegates appeared to support Shields' position that Miller should be allowed to speak to a council meeting.

"He's not a union member," said Dick Belfit of the Telecommunications Workers Union. "He's not in favor of unions."

Bill Doherty, a member of the Canadian Union of Public Employees, said if Miller has been wrongly accused he can write a letter to the council correcting the record.

"This is not a public forum," he said. "This is a forum for the affiliates of this council."

Ryan said apart from Miller's views on right-to-work, he is a non-union employer and has been for six years.

Ryan said if Miller feels he has been wronged he has a platform from which to set the record straight.

Shields closed the discussion by saying he would abide by the delegates' wishes but he felt inviting Miller to the meeting would provide an opportunity to have a "dialogue with people who ostensibly don't understand our position."

Golf club fees up

Cedar Hill Golf Club, operated by Saanich, increased membership fees $40 on Wednesday.

The boost means men and women will pay $240 for 1980 memberships and a senior citizen membership will cost $150. The junior membership will remain at $50.

Green fees have been raised from $6 to $7 on weekdays and from $7 to $8 on weekends.

McDermott reprimand rejected

Victoria labor representatives refused Wednesday night to back a motion slamming Canadian Labor Congress president Dennis McDermott for "political" attacks on postal workers.

The motion had been put forward at a previous meeting by Peter de Belle, vice-president of the Victoria local of the Canadian Union of Postal Workers.

At that time he accused McDermott of "red-baiting and using McCarthyist slanders."

His motion asked the council to urge McDermott to stop such political attacks.

But the council executive recommended to the delegates that they vote against such a motion and that's what happened.

Council secretary Larry Ryan said the executive doesn't feel McDermott's recent comments on the postal workers were unprincipled.

They have to be taken in context with a recent, so-called manifesto put out by members of the Marxist-Leninist organization which amounts to a direct attack on McDermott, Ryan said.

Nothing to hide, court rules

VANCOUVER (CP) — Thomas Bunn will have the hide of the cougar that killed two of his dogs, a British Columbia Supreme Court judge ruled Wednesday.

Justice Lloyd McKenzie rejected a claim by the Crown that the provincial court judge who originally awarded the hide to Bunn acted without jurisdiction.

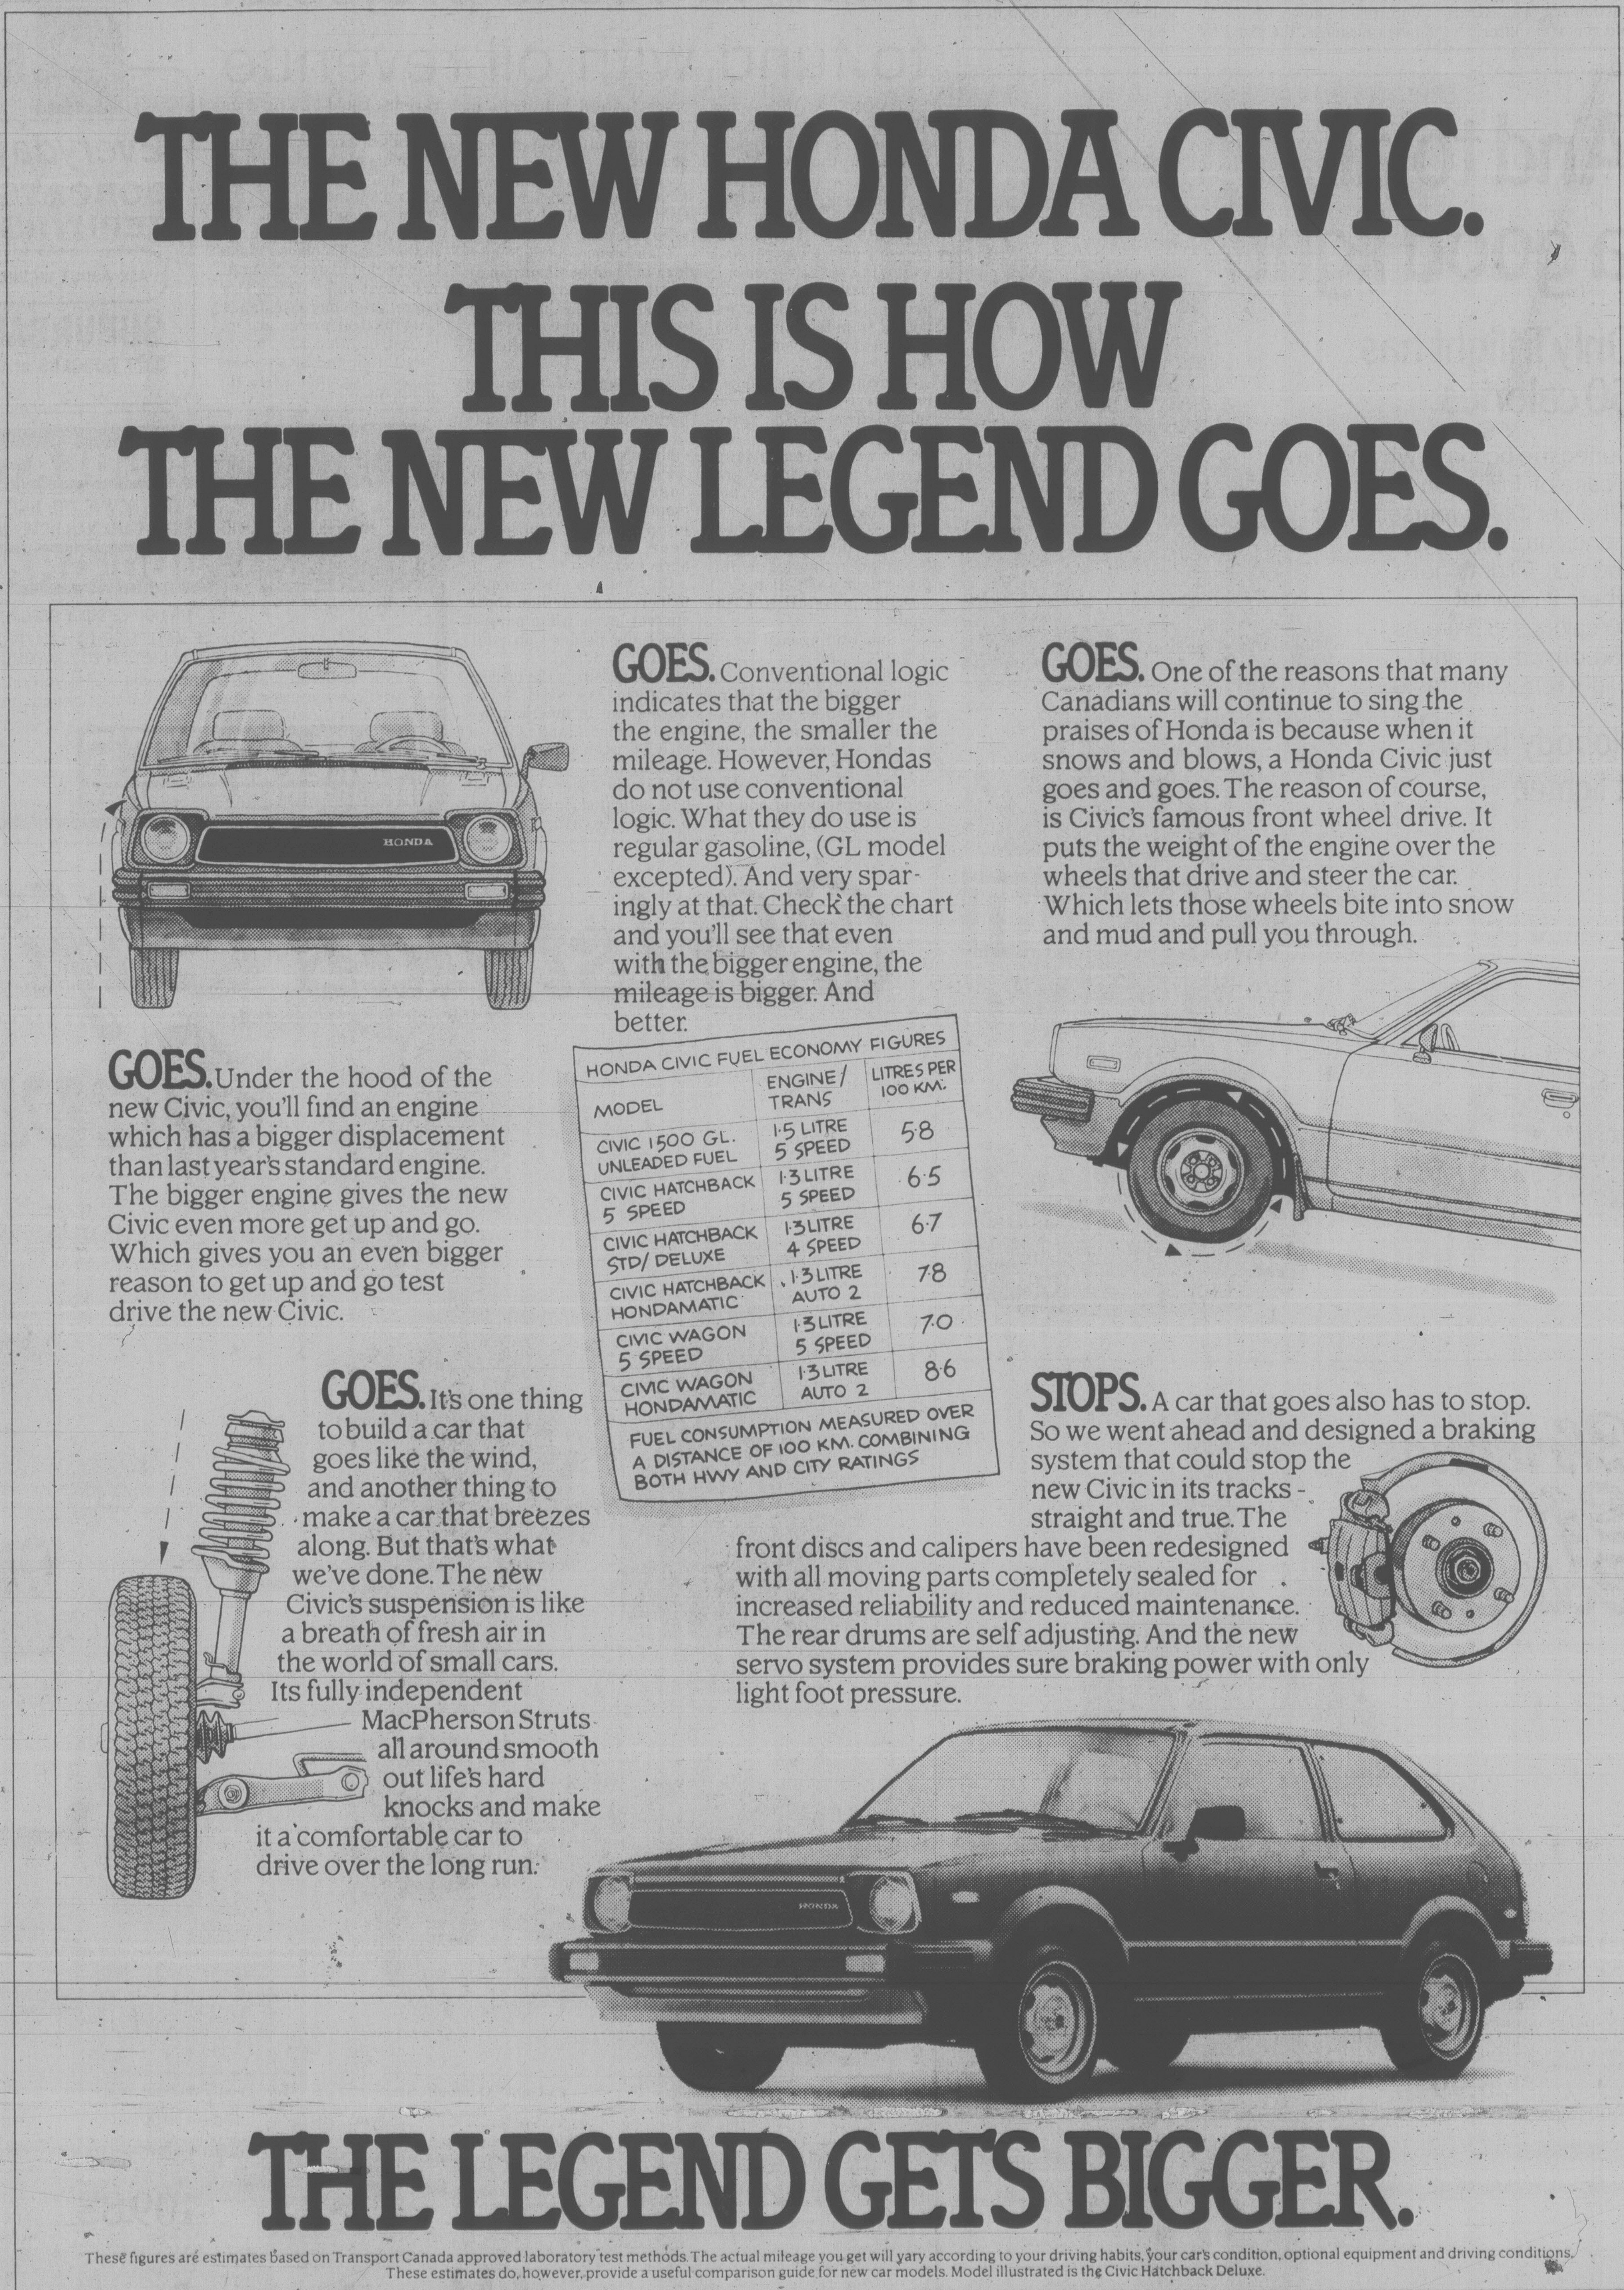
The case began near Horsefly when a conservation officer seized the pelt of a cougar Bunn had shot.

The conservation officer placed the matter before a provincial court judge, who awarded the hide to Bunn, and the Crown appealed.

Death crash charges laid

CACHE CREEK (CP) — A North Bay, Ont., truck driver has been charged with two counts of criminal negligence causing death after two Lillooet men were killed Tuesday in collision between a pickup truck and a semi-trailer unit on the Trans-Canada Highway near here.

Police said Gary Arthur Lacarte, 28, will appear in provincial court in Ashcroft Jan. 9. He was released on his own recognizance.



THE NEW HONDA CIVIC.
THIS IS HOW THE NEW LEGEND GOES.

GOES. Conventional logic indicates that the bigger the engine, the smaller the mileage. However, Hondas do not use conventional logic. What they do use is regular gasoline, (GL model excepted). And very sparingly at that. Check the chart and you'll see that even with the bigger engine, the mileage is bigger. And better.

GOES. One of the reasons that many Canadians will continue to sing the praises of Honda is because when it snows and blows, a Honda Civic just goes and goes. The reason of course, is Civic's famous front wheel drive. It puts the weight of the engine over the wheels that drive and steer the car. Which lets those wheels bite into snow and mud and pull you through.

GOES. Under the hood of the new Civic, you'll find an engine which has a bigger displacement than last year's standard engine. The bigger engine gives the new Civic even more get up and go. Which gives you an even bigger reason to get up and go test drive the new Civic.

HONDA CIVIC FUEL ECONOMY FIGURES

MODEL	ENGINE/ TRANS	LITRES PER 100 KM.
CIVIC 1500 GL. UNLEADED FUEL	1·5 LITRE 5 SPEED	5·8
CIVIC HATCHBACK 5 SPEED	1·3 LITRE 5 SPEED	6·5

CIVIC HATCHBACK HONDAMATIC	1·3 LITRE AUTO 2	7·8

CIVIC WAGON HONDAMATIC	1·3 LITRE AUTO 2	8·6

FUEL CONSUMPTION MEASURED OVER A DISTANCE OF 100 KM. COMBINING BOTH HWY AND CITY RATINGS

GOES. It's one thing to build a car that goes like the wind, and another thing to make a car that breezes along. But that's what we've done. The new Civic's suspension is like a breath of fresh air in the world of small cars. Its fully independent MacPherson Struts all around smooth out life's hard knocks and make it a comfortable car to drive over the long run.

STOPS. A car that goes also has to stop. So we went ahead and designed a braking system that could stop the new Civic in its tracks - straight and true. The front discs and calipers have been redesigned with all moving parts completely sealed for increased reliability and reduced maintenance. The rear drums are self adjusting. And the new servo system provides sure braking power with only light foot pressure.

THE LEGEND GETS BIGGER.

These figures are estimates based on Transport Canada approved laboratory test methods. The actual mileage you get will vary according to your driving habits, your car's condition, optional equipment and driving conditions. These estimates do, however, provide a useful comparison guide for new car models. Model illustrated is the Civic Hatchback Deluxe.

New car design needed: Grafftey

Declining oil supplies and health hazards from existing cars make the development of radically new designs imperative, the federal minister told the Calgary Chamber of Commerce.

Canada's weak role in research and development would be greatly strengthened if the new design work was undertaken here.

"It's going to be virtually impossible to be powering automobiles by 2010 in terms of a conventional internal combustion engine," Grafftey told reporters later.

"I would like to see a Canadian automobile industry. We've got one now but it does precious little research and development."

Canadian factories produced 10 per cent of North American cars but generally depended on United States companies for research.

Grafftey told chamber members that the search for a "socially acceptable" automobile — safe, non-polluting, with some new motive power — is a challenge that exists perhaps more in Alberta than in other places.

With its growing role "as the economic centre of gravity of the nation" and the enterprise shown by its Alberta business, the province can play a major role in meeting the challenge.

Grafftey told reporters that the lack of automobile factories in Alberta should be no handicap in the hundreds of specific research projects that would be part of starting from scratch to design a new car.

He said the re-invented car should have the following features:

—Maintenance-free brakes.

—Automatic hazard warning or avoidance.

—Altered designs to reduce pedestrian injuries.

—Better performance of items needed in the Canadian environment, including defrosters and heaters.

In a question-and-answer session with chamber members Grafftey said defects in Canada's constitution may be aggravating current problems with energy pricing.

He said a new federalism with new constitutional rules could help the energy problem as well as the Quebec situation.

Later, he told reporters "it seems apparent that present constitutional arrangements have not served the energy debate terribly well."

The authors of the British North America Act, he said, probably did not envisage the current dispute.

Asked whether he was thinking of any specific constitutional changes that would help the energy dispute between Ottawa and Alberta, Grafftey replied that his remarks were "just an observation."

The BNA Act gives provinces control over natural resources but the federal government jurisdiction over interprovincial trade and national taxation policies. Part of the current dispute involves Alberta's contention that Ottawa can not tax resource production in addition to oil companies' income.

Bouey broke law on fraud: author

EDMONTON (UPC) — Economist Dr. Verne Atrill said he believes he has grounds to file suit against Bank of Canada governor Gerald Bouey over the handling of Canada's national debt.

Atrill, in Edmonton to promote his new book How All Economies Work, said Wednesday at a business seminar Canada is virtually insolvent because the Bank of Canada has stretched itself to the limit through massive borrowing to pay the mounting debt.

"I believe the grounds exist in objective economics to take Dr. Bouey, the deputy minister of finance and the minister before the Supreme Court of Canada and convince the court that since at least 1973, those officers of the crown have broken the civil law, if not the criminal law, covering fraud," Atrill said.

Atrill said he believes Bouey contravened the Bank of Canada Act by causing the depreciation of the dollar.

Alberta seeks projects to fund with oil revenue

EDMONTON (CP) — The Alberta government, assisted by the Alberta Petroleum Marketing Commission, is compiling a list of major national energy schemes it may finance with an estimated $22 billion in increased petroleum revenue within the next five years.

The massive increase in provincial revenue is expected from the coming federal-provincial energy pricing agreement.

Alberta has been criticized in eastern Canada for its reinvestment of the petrodollars it now collects. The provincial government is apparently considering several ways to recycle the oil dollars across Canada.

One is the possible investment in the upgrading of Canadian refineries to improve their production.

Other possibilities include:

— substituting coal for oil in the Maritimes;

— loaning money to help build a natural gas pipeline to the Maritimes from Montreal so Alberta natural gas can be substituted for oil there;

— investing in Manitoba hydroelectric power and encouraging Petrosar and other eastern industries to use sources other than crude oil for chemical and plastics production.

The investment plans still include up to $4 billion for the Cold Lake and Alsands oil sands plants.

Plans also include undetermined amounts of money for the Alaska oil and natural gas pipelines, a business equity fund, Pacific port improvements and future oil plants.

The amount of money the government will have for major national investments is expected to grow dramatically next July.

Figures obtained by The Journal indicate government royalty revenue could jump about $4.5 billion a year over the five-year agreement.

Oil royalties are expected to increase $8.3 billion above current levels while natural gas could produce an additonal $13.5 billion.

Final details in the pricing formula are still being worked out in meetings between federal and Alberta officials over federal taxing measures.

Premier Peter Lougheed has indicated some of the province's future excess revenue could also be channeled to Alberta's municipalities in a few years to pay off debts accumulated since the last government write-off last summer.

The amount of money the government will have for major national investments is expected to grow dramatically next July. After a $1-a-barrel price increase Jan. 1, Canadian oil prices are expected to jump $3 a barrel July 1, followed by an added $2 every six months to the end of 1984.

MARTIN: 50 years as MP and diplomat

Martin honored

OTTAWA (CP) — Paul Martin came home to the House Wednesday night for a glittering testimonial banquet honoring him on a career as politician and diplomat that began nearly 50 years ago.

Prime Minister Joe Clark was host for the lobster-and-Chateaubriand dinner in the Railway Committee Room in tribute to Martin, 76, who retired recently as Canada's high commissioner in London.

After an unsuccessful attempt at getting elected to the Ontario legislature, Martin entered the House of Commons as a Liberal MP in 1935.

Among the 120 guests Wednesday were former governors-general Roland Michener and Jules Leger, and Opposition leader Pierre Trudeau, who Martin opposed in the 1968 Liberal leadership convention.

Also present was Lionel Chevrier who once served as high commissioner to Britain and is the only person senior to Martin among living members of the Canadian Privy Council.

Trudeau named him high commissioner five years ago. Since retiring, Martin has been working on his memoirs at his home in Windsor, Ont.

Save Petro-Can fund starts

CALGARY (CP) — The New Democratic Party has started a fund-raising appeal to help their campaign to keep Petro-Canada under government ownership.

As part of the campaign, scientist and broadcaster David Suzuki urges in a letter that Petro-Canada be preserved instead of being "dismembered to become another part of a profiteering oil industry."

Suzuki said he toured part of the Arctic last summer, where oil development threatens the environment:

"What impressed me was the deep concern officials in Petro-Can show towards protection of the environment and the lifestyle of the native peoples. This attitude was in sharp contrast to that of the representatives of the other companies."

Crown corporations, he said, have in theory the prime goal of serving the publc interest, not "profit and power."

He said Petro-Canada also provides Canadian ownership:

"In spite of enormous subsidies, through super depletion allowance, by the Canadian taxpayer for oil company exploration, the oil that is found does not belong to Canadians — it belongs to the companies!"

PCs seek debate limit

OTTAWA (CP) — The Progressive Conservative government continued pressing Wednesday for speedy passage of its mortgage interest and property tax credit plan by announcing plans to limit debate on the legislation.

Privy Council President Walter Baker told the Commons he will propose a motion Friday to end clause-by-clause debate on the bill Monday night.

The motion is to be debated for two hours before being put to a vote. Objections by Liberals and New Democrats could force the minority government to seek the support of the five-member Social Credit caucus.

Baker did not say Wednesday whether he would also seek to restrict debate on the third and final reading of the tax credit bill.

The proposal to limit committee debate marked the fourth time in recent weeks the government has flexed its muscles to get the bill through Parliament before the Christmas recess.

Baker has said passage by Christmas is needed if home-owners are to begin receiving benefits under the plan next year.

In an interview Wednesday, Baker said he decided to try to limit the committee because he was unable to reach an agreement on the length of the debate with representatives of other parties.

Baker's move was immediately criticized by Liberal House Leader Allan MacEachen as offensive and preposterous.

Ironcially, the former Liberal government had moved to limit debate several times in the last Parliament only to be criticized by the Conservative Opposition of the day.

The tax credit bill would reduce the 1979 federal income tax of home-owners by as much as $375.

Senate chamber out to NDP MPs

OTTAWA (UPC) — Two novice New Democratic Party MPs were refused admission to the Senate chamber by the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod Wednesday and escorted out of the Senate lobby by his staff members.

Ian Waddell and Jim Fulton, both British Columbia MPs, were led away from the Upper Chamber after they attempted to enter and question Industry, Trade and Commerce Minister Robert de Cotret.

Sen. de Cotret does not sit in the House of Commons where he could be questioned by Opposition MPs, as are other members of Prime Minister Joe Clark's cabinet.

"Since we don't have a member in the Senate, Mr. Waddell and Mr. Fulton took it upon themselves to go directly to the source," said a spokesman for NDP leader Ed Broadbent.

Clark hints at Chrysler aid

OTTAWA (CP) — Prime Minister Joe Clark came close Wednesday to endorsing government aid for Chrysler Canada Ltd.

"If an agreement is beneficial to Chrysler and to Canada, we would be prepared to contemplate that," he told opposition critics in the Commons.

De Bane first to toss hat into Liberal ring

OTTAWA (CP) — Pierre De Bane, former supply and services minister, said Wednesday he intends to seek the Liberal leadership.

The MP for the Quebec riding of Matane said he will announce his candidature officially "before or after Christmas."

De Bane is the first MP to indicate he will try to replace the retiring Pierre Trudeau.

The 41-year-old lawyer has been an MP since 1968 and is considered one of the more leftward-leaning members of the Liberal caucus.

The two men considered the front-runners in the race, Donald Macdonald and John Turner, have yet to announce their candidacy.

Mac still undecided

SARNIA, Ont. (CP) — Donald Macdonald said Wednesday he still is a week to 10 days away from deciding whether he will run for the federal Liberal party leadership.

Macdonald, 47, made the comment prior to speaking at a dinner for Bud Cullen, a Liberal cabinet minister defeated in the May federal election.

Macdonald said many of his friends were urging him to run but he was still torn between his duty to his family and to Canada.

"It's pretty personal. You'll have to wait," he said.

U.S. plans commando unit

By JOHN J. FIALKA
Washington Star Service

WASHINGTON — The U.S. Defence Department is planning to spend $9 billion over the next five years to create a "rapid deployment force" capable of sending armored Army and Marine units into sensitive Third World regions such as the Persian Gulf.

A senior defence official said the plan includes the purchase of at least 50 new CX aircraft, a plane capable of carrying tanks and other large military cargo over long distances, and 15 new multi-purpose cargo ships that would pre-position tanks, guns, fuel, ammunition and rations at various places around the world.

The plan, which has not been formally approved by the White House, has been proposed by the Defence Department because it would fill a major gap in the nation's military readiness — insufficient airlift and sealift capability.

The "division of labor" within the force would give the Army primary control over the CX planes and the existing C-5A aircraft, the massive planes capable of delivering armored units to inland sites overseas.

The size of the Army force planned has not been disclosed, but the Army has discussed 110,000 men, to be drawn from units not specifically assigned to roles in a NATO war in Europe.

The Army contingent would include the 82nd Airborne Division, Army spokesmen said. Wednesday the Marine Corps held a news conference to announce its part of the plan: a combat spearhead of 40,000 to 45,000 troops to be flown to war on passenger aircraft and draw equipment from the 15 ships, which would be able to supply them for 30 days.

Maj. Gen. Paul X. Kelley, director of requirements and programs for the Marines, said that the exact design of the ship has not been determined, but he added that it will have reinforced decks to carry tanks and the capability to offload in areas without elaborate port facilities.

He described the situation in which they would be used as a "permissive one," in which a nation under attack or threat invites U.S. support and can provide a secure beach or port facility and a nearby airstrip.

He said the ships could be modified versions of existing merchant ship designs and would cost about $110 million apiece. The money for two of them is to be included in the 1981 budget.

As part of its new mission, Kelley said, the Marines would be given enough money to restore 6,000 of 10,000 men cut from its budget plans last spring because there was not enough equipment to support them.

Defence officials said the cost of the ships and equipment they would carry would be approximately $3 billion. "We're going to have to have two of a lot of things," Kelley said, referring to tanks and other items that would be consigned to seagoing storage.

Defence officials said that the 50 CX aircraft planned for deployment after 1985 would cost approximately $6 billion. They added that no firm design has been accepted for the airships.

Human rights violations cited in Soviet bloc

WASHINGTON (Reuter) — The United States on Wednesday accused the Soviet Union, East Germany and Czechoslovakia of new human rights abuses in violation of the 1975 Helsinki agreements.

In the latest of its semi-annual reports to Congress on compliance with the accords reached at the European Security Conference, the Carter administration said there has been a mixed record of encouraging progress and serious failures.

It praised such developments as the record rate of Jewish emigration from the Soviet Union, the East German amnesty under which many political prisoners were freed, and Hungary's new and less severe penal code.

On the negative side, the report said, members of Czechoslovak and Soviet groups set up to monitor compliance with Helsinki human rights provisions have been imprisoned or harassed, while East Germany has made harsh additions to its criminal laws.

"The United States is not satisfied with this record and intends to pursue the goal of full implementation," it said.

The report also critized the refusal of Soviet authorities to grant exit visas to many Jews as well as members of other religious groups, despite the record emigration of more than 50,000 Jews this year.

The report said East Germany's new criminal code, which took effect ironically on the fourth anniversary of the Helsinki declaration, "broadens the definition of political crimes and increases the severity of the penalties which may be applied."

The Vancouver doctor who this week removed gallstone fragments from the Shah of Iran says the operation was a complete success but doesn't when his controversial patient will leave New York. Dr. Joachim Burhenne, who traveled to the New York Hospital-Cornell Medical Centre, refused all comment the shah's general health. But, he said, "I've never seen a patient that didn't smile once the stones come out." Burhenne, head of the radiology departments at Vancouver General Hospital and the University of B.C. said he "would be the last to know if (the shah) can leave New York."

Tennis player Arthur Ashe, who suffered a heart attack in July, has been admitted to hospital in Jacksonville, again with what a hospital spokesman described as "mild chest discomfort." The 36-year-old Ashe "definitely has not had another heart attack," Memorial Hospital spokesman Charles Butler said after the 1975 Wimbledon champion was admitted

A nephew of Jimmy Carter in the medical facility at California's Vacaville Prison, who has been in and out of California prisons for a decade, will be paroled on Christmas Eve. He is William Carter Spann, the son of the president's sister, Gloria Carter Spann, now in prison on a conviction for armed robbery. The 33-year-old convict's wife, Jane, who married him in prison last April, says they have retained a Washington literary agent to negotiate requests for interviews.

Patrick Montague-Smith, considered the expert among experts on the subject of the aristocracy, is retiring in January and in the preface to the new Debrett's Peerage he lets loose a parting shot, in which he demands a royal ruling on the correct surname for Queen Elizabeth II. "Is it Windsor or Mountbatten-Windsor?" Montague-Smith asks. He points out that Windsor is the family name established by the Queen's grandfather, King George V, while Mountbatten is the family name of her husband, Prince Philip. Royal family members don't use surnames on everyday occasions, said Montague-Smith, but since the queen took the throne in 1952, both the Windsor and Mountbatten-Windsor names — confusingly and distressingly — have been used on legal documents.

Dear Abby:

I'm in a terrible spot and need your advice. I'm in love with a terrific man I'll call Larry. We plan to be married soon. Larry has a 7-year-old daughter I'll call Linda. Linda lives with her mother, from whom Larry has been divorced for three years, but he has the child every other weekend. She's spoiled, selfish, whiny and obnoxious, but Linda has her father wrapped around her little finger. She hangs on him constantly and pouts when he's near me.

Larry asked me if Linda could be our flowergirl, and before I knew what a little stinker she was, I said yes. Now I realize it was a big mistake. This is my first wedding. With Linda hanging all over Larry and pushing me in the background, my wedding will be ruined.

I've asked Larry to tell Linda we're not having the big wedding — we're going away to be married quietly instead. Then after we return from our honeymoon we'll take Linda to Disney World to make it up. What do you think?

On The Spot

Dear On:

I don't think it will work either. Be wise and proceed with your original plan. And if you want a lasting marriage, I urge you to seek professional help in learning how to cope with Linda. Her jealousy is understandable. She's a 7-year-old who "lost" her father when she was 4 and is now facing the threat of losing him again.

Dear Abby:

What do you think of a woman (in her 80s) who would come to an 83-year-old man (my father) and tell him that she had to rid her conscience (after 50 years) of the fact that years ago my mother had been unfaithful to him? Mother has been in a rest home for the last six years.

My father, who had always been alert and in good health, has been in a state of shock ever since. He said he never in the world suspected anything like this from my mother. He used to visit her twice a day, but hasn't been to see her since. He even turned her picture to the wall.

Used To Live There

Dear Used To:

The woman who brought your father the news could be mentally disturbed, senile or lying. Explain this to your father in an effort to comfort him.

Dear Abby:

This is in response to Realistic. What gives her the right to be so critical of couples living together?

I'm 24, single and living alone. But I sure hope to live together before any final ties are made.

Six years ago I married a man I really thought I knew and understood. Six months later we filed for divorce. If we had lived together for six months, a lot of pain and unnecessary expense could have been avoided.

LITTER
MASTER BARBERS

By LON WOOD

There's one Saanich homemaker you'd better not mention recycling to — unless you're prepared to digest a steady stream of facts and figures on how the practice would benefit us all.

"When I go to a supermarket, I refuse a shopping bag — I take my own," Audrey Johnson, of 3500 Cedar Hill Rd., told The Times Wednesday. "This is only one of hundreds of simple habits you can develop to save us both money and large quantities of our finite resources."

Mrs. Johnson, a member of Saanich council's citizens' task force on recycling, says there's no return on garbage removal — and it's a service Saanich taxpayers pay for dearly.

"The garbage is taken away and most people don't think about it again," she said. "But it goes to the Hartland Road dump, and that dump has four to five years at the outside before it reaches its peak absorbency. Then they will have to truck 30 or 40 miles — just calculate the trucks, the staff and the fuel!

"If that doesn't warrant cutting down the amount of garbage we get rid of, what does? Especially since there are so many materials we throw out that we have a market for."

Sales of newspaper, cardboard, glass, aluminum foil and tin, she said, are turned into profit by many municipalities in North America.

"Some are able to pay for all their collecting costs, others at least save the gas that's consumed for trucking."

Term for the nine-member task force, set up last April, expires Dec. 15 — but Johnson is optimistic its recommendations to council will eventually lead to separated refuse pickup in the municipality.

"We feel quite optimistic Saanich council will accept the proposal in principle," she said. "The task force would hope that implementation of a resource-separation curbside pickup would take place by the spring of next year.

"My own optimistic opinion is that in the long run it can't mean anything else but saving money — not to mention the saving of resources."

Last year Saanich sent out a questionaire on garbage pickup to residents.

"On the same form, they asked what people would like to see municipal savings go toward — cycling paths, park maintenance. But there was no reference to recycling and the municipality decided to continue back door, regular refuse pickup," said Johnson.

What followed, she said, was an influx of letters to the municipal hall, mainly from those who felt the general public should start considering source separation and recycling and that there should be a determined public education program under municipal auspices.

"We got acknowledgement of our letters — all of us — and it was discussed within council meetings.

"The outcome was that Mayor Mel Couvelier undertook to pursue the issue and through Ald. Howard Sturrock contacted these people regarding formation of a task force."

The overview was to research and formulate a program on household separation, curbside pickup and recycling and present it to council by mid-December.

Key ingredient to the task force study, which is not yet available for public release in its entirety, is a telephone survey of Saanich residents on their attitudes about a possible recycling program with curbside pickup.

With the help of Don Sher and Richard Goodacre of Enertask Consultants of Victoria, and Dr. Dan Koenig of UVic, the group polled 1,620 names at random from the voters list.

Forty-seven volunteers undertook the telephoning and in two weeks the data was put onto computer cards and turned over to Enertask for analysis.

"The results were very encouraging," said Johnson, with 793 people responding to the survey, which came up with the following:

— 87% of those responding said they knew the location of at least one of the six recycling depots in the Greater Victoria area.

— 76% of those responding are presently separating some waste materials. Sixty-eight per cent are separating newspaper; 41 per cent are taking newspaper to a recycling depot; 50 per cent are separating glass with 28 per cent taking it to a recycling depot; 25 per cent separating tin cans with 19 per cent taking them to a depot.

— Regarding participation to collect recyclables at the curb, 78 per cent said they would separate and set out newspapers; 77 per cent said they would be willing to set out glass and 70 per cent would set out cans.

— Of those willing to set out one or more materials for collection, 69 per cent would approve of an additional 50 cents per month in the cost per household for collection and disposal of garbage.

These individuals constituted 63 per cent of the total contacted.

"By no means does it mean 76 per cent of the people are totally involved in recycling," said Johnson. "But at least they have started by taking papers to the Boy Scouts, or putting things on a compost heap and so on."

She said that to evolve properly, the whole household has to participate — not just one person.

"If we had attempted this type of study five years ago, I wouldn't be so optimistic. Now, people are more enlightened about such changes — and need to change. There has been a lot of awareness built up since the early seventies."

Johnson said that with the task force findings in the hands of the municipality, it will be up to council to act — whether discussion and a vote, or through further study by committee.

"Some of us have been resource management consumers for decades — these task force people have just learned this in the last 10 years like the majority of society, said Johnson.

"They've been chipping away at this continually, trying to get the message through.

"Before, it was just a case of decreasing the cost by having it picked up at the curb — but now, in Canada, 85 per cent of all garbage is picked up at the curb. Yet here we still resort to back door pickup despite a topography so extreme in some cases it really increases the time and personnel factor considerably.

"Because of age a lot of people are incapable of toting their recyclables as far as the curb. There's another percentage of people concerned about just vandalism. If it's recylclables and they're properly cleaned and prepared and as outlined in the program, this diminishes the possibility of crows and dogs making a mess of things.

"We think ourselves, as a task force, that there could be more advantages to having curbside over back door pickup. It eliminates confusion over what is regular garbage and what is being recycled.

"And if you have trouble starting, just remember the three Rs — Reduce, Re-use and Recycle. That's the order of importance."

Simple fractures are not minor ones

By DR. L.L. COLEMAN

My son had a simple fracture of the left leg after a bicycle accident. He is 16. What I want to know is: If the fracture was a "simple" one, why did it take months for it to heal?

Mrs. D.D.K.

Dear Mrs. K.:

Many people are confused by the term "simple" fracture. Actually, it does not mean that the fracture is not a serious one. It is a term used to distinguish one type of fracture from another. Both a "simple" and a "compound" fracture may be serious or minor, depending on the particular bone that is broken and the injury to the muscles and the ligaments that surround the bone.

From the technical point of view, a simple fracture is one in which the bone has been broken without injury to the skin around it. A special kind of simple fracture is known as the "green stick" variety, in which the bone is splintered without a through-and-through break.

A compound fracture is one in which the bone or fragments of bone have torn through the muscles and skin and have thus exposed the injured bone to infection.

The healing of all fractures is a very complex mechanism. In young, healthy people with good blood circulation, both simple and compound fractures tend to heal rather quickly.

Occasionally, for some unexplained reason, even in the young, a condition known as "non-union" of bone fragments does occur. This delays proper healing and probably is what accounted for the fact that your son's fracture took so long to heal.

There are now many types of procedures, such as bone grafts, electrical stimulation and special metallic nails which can help facilitate the healing process.

Dear Doctor:

I recovered from an attack of jaundice two months ago. I have been well since. Do these attacks tend to come back?

Mr. J.A.

Dear Mr. A.:

Jaundice is not a disease. It is a symptom. It is a discoloration of the skin. It is readily recognized by a yellowish discoloration of the conjunctiva, a thin membrane that covers the eye.

Obstructions of the gallbladder, or the gallbladder ducts, are frequent causes of transitory jaundice.

Once the basic cause for your jaundice is determined and eliminated, there is no reason why you should anticipate recurrent episodes.

More deafness blamed on high noise pollution

CALGARY (CP) — A country-wide report shows Canadians are suffering increasing rates of deafness and associated psychological problems because of noise pollution, says a spokesman for the Environment Council of Alberta.

ECA executive director Bill Flook said that the report, to be released soon, criticizes federal and provincial governments for lack of noise regulation.

It also pinpoints flaws in existing government regulations, Flook told delegates attending the Health Unit Association of Alberta annual meeting.

The report, sponsored by the ECA and headed by University of Calgary physics professor Dr. Hugh Jones, concentrates on community reaction, noise laws, building codes, transportation noise and effects on the individual.

"Canada is rather in a bad way as far as noise is concerned" especially when compared to noise control in the United States and European countries, Jones said.

Cookbooks for children get panned

MONTREAL (CP) — With few exceptions, cookbooks designed for children are "mediocre," "dull" and "downright insulting to the intelligence," say elementary and high school teachers in the Montreal area.

The recipes are even insulting to the palate, says Connie Gardiner, one of a number of home-economics teachers asked recently about how to encourage children as young as six years old to cook.

The "yummy delicious" kind of snack that children's cookbooks concentrate on is far less interesting to a young cook than apple crisp or baked chicken, she says.

But the best ingredient for a child's success is that he be shown what to do.

"There's no such thing as giving children a recipe and expecting it can be followed," says Elma Dolansky, another teacher. "They have to see it done."

And children have the best chance of becoming junior chefs if their parents can tolerate a mess while encouraging experiments at home.

Parents can start by encouraging even preschoolers to watch as meals are prepared. Most children do this automatically because of a natural interest in the activity, so many pupils appear knowledgable when they begin cooking classes in school.

"The children come thinking they know everything about cooking," says Tatiana Tremblay, a high school teacher.

"Then it turns out they can't measure or mix or sift. Maybe they've tried to cook at home but they're too slow, so mum takes over."

Cooking is a compulsory subject for boys and girls in grades seven and eight in Montreal, a regulation that will take effect in the rest of the province next fall.

"There's no measuring, no cutting, nothing hot," Mrs. Dolansky says. "They'll come into my class and say, 'Yuk, salad' then make one and eat every bite."

David Szanto, a 12-year-old student, made his first omelette when he was six and loves to cook.

One recent afternoon at home he cooly prepared a four-course meal for eight people.

But a good pie crust has eluded him.

"My pie crust is always soggy," David admits, looking slightly downcast. "I think I'm going to try cooking the crust first, then add the filling."

While influenza is considered a respiratory disease, the whole body actually suffers from it. Aching of the head, back, arms, and legs is common. The victim also suffers from a high fever, chills, and weakness.

If influenza is not complicated by other infections, the sufferer is usually back on his feet within a week. Among the serious complications that can develop, are viral pneumonia, encephalitis (inflammation of the brain), and acute kidney failure. Older people and people who have organic disorders are particularly prone to these side effects.

Since the counter culture of the 1960's, drug abuse has become a much discussed social phenomenon. Most of us are familiar with the more commonly used drugs by name. But what about the effects that accompany them?

Amphetamines are a group of drugs that act as a stimulant upon the central nervous system. Included in this group are benzedrine, dexedrine, and methedrine. The user experiences talkativness, jumpiness, loss of appetite, and sleeplessness.

Large doses of amphetamines result in hallucinations and dangerously aggressive behavior.

Upon withdrawal, the user experiences severe depression. Amphetamins also make a person more prone to high blood pressure, heart attacks, and brain damage.

Drug Reference Chart is a comprehensive guide to the physical symptoms, behavior patterns, and dangers which accompany the most frequently abused drugs. Besides amphetamins, hallucinogens, opium derivatives, sedatives, nicotine, and alcohol are accounted for.

Dental experts say keep wisdom teeth

WASHINGTON (AP) — If a person is not having problems with his wisdom teeth, then dentists should not routinely remove them, a panel of dental experts has concluded.

After three days of discussion, a group of specialists convened by the National Institutes of Health concluded late in the week that there are a number of good reasons for removing the teeth.

But the experts had difficulty agreeing on what those reasons are.

At issue are the third molars, or wisdom teeth, found in the back corners of most people's mouths. The large, flat teeth are designed for crushing or grinding.

These teeth often do not grow properly — sometimes staying below the gums, sometimes partially growing out and sometimes growing at odd angles. Infections, painful abscesses and gum and bone problems can result.

Some health care critics contend that dentists unnecessarily remove too many wisdom teeth, subjecting patients to painful surgery and recovery while driving up health costs.

Many dentists rebut the charge, saying that removing the wisdom teeth early prevents future complications, such as recurring infections, and heads off what can be more difficult surgery later.

The conference was convened here to review all known scientific information on wisdom teeth surgery and to see what experts could agree upon to recommend as guidelines for dentists.

"The consensus of the conference was that if there are indications for removing the third molar, then it should be removed at the earliest possible age," said Dr. Daniel Laskin of the University of Illinois, conference co-chairman.

"And the consensus was that if there is no problem, then you should not remove normal molars," he said.

And the group concluded that just because one wisdom tooth has to be taken out, dentists should not assume the others have to go without examining options for leaving them in.

The panel also said wisdom teeth that are impacted, whether they have not emerged from the gum or only partially so, should be removed in most cases if there is evidence of infection or frequent inflammation.

An impacted tooth usually is one that cannot come through the gum and is butted up against neighboring teeth, possibly damaging them.

Plenty of pork

SEOUL (AP) — A 127-year-old woman believed to be the oldest person in South Korea credits her longevity to eating pork every day. Kim Chin-hwa said she started eating pork as a child because her father hunted wild boar.

Running to the phone a two-step new step

WASHINGTON (UPI) — "Gutline," the area's first medical hotline for digestive problems from diarrhea to diverticulosis, opened this week.

The free telephone service, operated by the Washington branch of the American Digestive Disease Society, a non-profit health organization, resulted from recent studies on the extent of digestive disorders.

"No one wants to talk about all the diarrhea in this country," said Miriam Ratner, vice president of the society, "but it is the No. 1 cause of industrial work absence."

Digestive illness, often chronic and debilitating, afflicts more than 22 million North Americans. It is the leading cause of hospitalization and costs more than $35 billion annually, according to a congressional study.

Nagging seen as quitting aid

Kenneth Muscatel says his studies on why people smoke and why they quit indicate smokers who quit received less support for their smoking at home and work than smokers who keep on puffing.

Among his other findings:

—People who quit believe smoking is more dangerous and less socially desirable than people who try but fail to quit.

—It is just as hard for a light smoker to quit than a heavy smoker.

—Smokers likeliest to succeed or fail can be identified before they begin treatment by their attitudes and beliefs about quitting.

"Smokers are not all the same homogeneous blob," says Muscatel. "Just because they all smoke doesn't mean the same treatment will make them quit."

Muscatel began his study by participating in free quit-smoking treatments. He then questioned 132 smokers, including those who participated in the treatments and others who were not trying to quit.

His two main conclusions are that smokers who sought treatment stuck more strongly to their beliefs about smoking than those who didn't seek treatment.

The other was that those who quit differed significantly from those who tried but failed.

"In the best of all possible worlds, we could predict ultimately what will happen based on the attitudes and beliefs of people who come in to quit smoking," he said.

From his findings, Muscatel said he found that for some people, health is most important while others wanted to be accepted by friends.

Energy awareness reaches diet

food for thought

By DR. JEAN MAYER

Increasingly, readers are asking us what might be done to cut down on the fuel and energy expended in the preparation and production of food. That's not an easy question to answer.

As one of our colleagues at Tufts University, Dr. Mary Rawitscher, concluded in a recent analysis, published in the journal Technical Review, we seem to know quite a bit about the amount of energy expended in producing food, on the farm and in the factory, but quite a bit less about the amount we use in the kitchen.

Meat, for example, is clearly an energy-consumption food. It takes considerably more energy to produce a pound of protein from an animal source than it takes to produce a pound of protein from such vegetable sources as grain or dried beans or peas. Similarly, sugar is not a cheap source of calories when it comes to energy. Indeed, as much as one-fifth of all the energy used to process foods is expended in either processing sugar beets, refining cane sugar or milling wet corn and producing malt liquors and beverages.

Overall, it takes about three times as much energy to process convenience foods as it does to process frozen fruits and vegetables.

Packaging, too, ads to energy costs -- particularly the cans and containers of convenience foods. On the other hand, commercial processors use raw foods efficiently and with less waste than, say, home cooks.

We are just beginning to learn that the shape and materials of kitchen utensils, as well as such things as the types of lids used, effect the amount of fuel needed for cooking. For instance, it is more economical to cook on a stove-top electric element than to bake in a conventional oven. Similarly, a self-cleaning oven uses less energy to stay at a set temperature than a conventional oven. The overall amount of energy used, however, depends on how often the oven cleans itself.

Buying frozen foods in quantity may save you money, but is not energy-efficient in the freezer. Food stored for 30 days in the average home freezer requires 2,200 kilocalories per pound as compared to a commercial freezer which requires slightly over 50 kilocalories per pound.

Clearly, it is much too complicated for consumers to determine which foods consume the least amount of energy. But just suppose that our whole population -- some 220 million people -- used wheat flour instead of sugar to provide half of the 36.9 trillion nutritional calories we now get from sucrose each year. In that case, each of us could still, if we wished, consume 48 pounds of all the caloric sweetners. The saving in energy would be equal to 12.9 million barrels of oil.

Or, if we were to use one less throw-away aluminum tray each month, we'd save another 2.8 million barrels of oil. And if, once a month, we eliminated just one hour's baking in a regular oven at 350 degrees, we would save another 7.6 million barrels of oil.

If we gave up one pound of beef each month and replaced it with an extra pound of bread, we would save over the year, believe it or not, energy equal to that in 121 million barrels of oil.

Finally, suppose that, once a month, everyone substituted a pound of low energy fish, such as perch or sardines, for a pound of beef or high-energy shrimp. The year's energy saving would be between 99 and 117 million barrels of oil.

Does all this sound like a mathematical fairy-tale? As it's put here, yes. But each family can choose ways of conserving food energy that best fit their needs and lifestyle. And the saving you achieve will be just as real.

Squeeze tells all on meat

TORONTO (CP) — Forget the Charmin, start squeezing that meat, the Better Business Bureau says.

Squeezing meat is the best way consumers can tell if meat is fresh, and not just masquerading as such, the bureau says.

Paul Tuz, president of the Toronto bureau, said Wednesday in a statement his office has received numerous complaints from consumers who had bought what they thought was fresh meat only to get it home and discover that it was still frozen in the middle.

Regulations require that previously frozen meats be prominently labelled as such.

"Some consumers will assume the meat is fresh and will put it in the freezer to use at a later date," said Tuz. "This will mean that the meat will be at least twice frozen and twice thawed before being consumed.

"Repeated freezing and thawing not only deteriorates the flavor and texture of the meat, but it can also increase the chance of food poisoning if there has been contamination of the meat."

Salmonella organisms increase with repeated thawing.

He said failing to label previously frozen meat may just be an oversight on the food store's part.

Consumers who find partly-frozen meat that hasn't been labelled previously-frozen should report it to the bureau or to the ministry of consumer and corporate affairs, Tuz said.

Senior eats well for $152 a year

By TOM UHLENBROCK

DUPO, Ill. (UPI) — Irene Prall says she spent more money this year for food. But then her food bill for 1978 averaged only 35 cents a day.

"A lot of people don't believe that, but it's all here in this book," said the 73-year-old widow, waving a battered brown notebook she retrieved from her purse.

"I've kept a record of everything I spent for food since 1975. I spent $127.29 in 1978 and this year it'll be about $25 more. But I've had a good bit of company this year and I haven't watched it as closely as I usually do. And I've also got some things that I bought still frozen in the icebox."

Mrs. Prall lives on her Social Security benefits, her savings and income from renting out a section of her modest, one-story home. She doesn't really need to pinch pennies, but believes most people spend far too much on food.

"I have seen so many people claim that they cannot live on Social Security, that they starve. I have proved to myself that it can be, but then I've always been economical," she said in an interview.

Mrs. Prall said she avoids such specialty cuts as rib eye and pork chops in favor of beef roasts and turkey.

She favors chicken and other meats that sell for around a $1 a pound. She said one chicken can last her several meals, and a roast will last more than a week.

"Tonight I'm having the last of a big pot of Irish stew I made with a roast and vegetables from my garden," she said. "I made it weeks ago, then froze individual portions.

"Last night I had a breast of chicken and some doughnuts my neighbor gave me. She was going to throw them out. I sliced them in half, put a little butter in the bottom of my skillet, and warmed them up. They were delicious."

She also never buys soda, alcoholic beverages, cookies and other bakery goods, prepared foods such as pizzas or paper products except bathroom tissue.

"I don't drink milk but I use canned evaporated milk on my cereal in the morning and for cooking," she said. "I never buy packaged things except for cake mixes. If I have company, I make my own rolls. I don't buy any fruits because I have my own canned."

Mrs. Prall grows most of her food in a 40-square-foot backyard garden. This year, she grew peas, corn, cabbage, black-eyed peas, lima beans, onions, tomatoes, beets, carrots, spinach, sweet potatoes, white potatoes, butter beans, turnips and garlic.

She cans or freezes anything she doesn't use fresh — using empty foil margarine cartons and the plastic wrapper from her newspaper as freezer cartons — and still has vegetables to give to her neighbors.

"I go to a horse barn down the street for my fertilizer," she said. "The owner's glad to get his stables cleaned out, and I can get six tubs of fertilizer in my car."

She said her 1974 Gremlin gets 25 miles per gallon, but she often rides the bus to visit her daughter in the St. Louis suburb of Glendale. The 44-mile round trip costs only 20 cents with her senior citizen's pass.

A retired tailor, Mrs. Prall makes her own clothes. She proudly displayed a blue suit, white blouse and pair of slacks she made from $7.65 worth of sale-priced fabric.

When she bought her present house 10 years ago, Mrs. Prall said, it was in disrepair. She tore out the walls down to the studs, put up new plasterboard, rewired the whole building, laid new carpeting and built most of the kitchen cabinets.

"I just had siding put on the outside," she added. "I watched them do it and now I know how."

Mrs. Prall said some neighbors tease her about tight budgeting. Some say it could not be done if illness struck.

"I've been in the hospital 10 times since my husband died in 1937," she said. "But somehow or another I get out of bed and start over. Three years ago I had to have an appendectomy. I had my surgery on the 18th of February and I got out and planted my potatoes on the 15th of March.

"When my husband died, I was left with two children, 4 and 6 years old, and nothing else — no home, no job, no Social Security benefits. My husband couldn't get any insurance because he had illness before. But I was determined. I just knew there was a way and I made that way."

Through ingenuity and hard work, Mrs. Prall reared both children and now even has money for such splurges as an annual trip to Florida and a European vacation she took last year with her daughter.

"I don't think I spent more than $2 for any meal while I was in Europe, and we had good food — good as I have here at home and sometimes better," she said. "It's just like here. You've got to use your head a little bit."

Children malnourished

NEW YORK (AP) — Many children in North America are malnourished not because they don't eat enough, but because they eat too many sugary, salty or fatty foods, nutrition experts say.

A group of nutritionists told the American Public Health Association this week that "overconsumption malnutrition" is a growing health problem as children substitute snack and processed foods for traditional food staples.

"Many of the causes of malnutrition we worried about a decade ago are no longer as serious as they used to be," said Johanna Dwyer, director of the Francis Stern Nutrition Clinic in Boston.

"What we have now is a class of problems which we have never focused on because we haven't thought of them as nutrition problems," she said. Among these, she said, are obesity, high blood pressure and hardening of the arteries.

Ms. Dwyer said surveys show that from 13 per cent to 20 per cent of U.S. children aged six to 11 are overweight and from six per cent to 24 per cent have high blood cholesterol levels, with blacks having even higher levels than whites. A high cholesterol level is often an early-warning sign of hardening of the arteries.

The salt content of foods is thought to help cause high blood pressure, she said, and many processed foods are high in salt.

The nutritionists said snacks, soft drinks and sweets account for most overconsumption malnutrition, but that staples like red meat and whole milk are coming under scrutiny for their high fat contents.

One reason children eat so poorly is the heavy influence of television advertising, said Dr. Luise Light, assistant to the administrator of the U.S. agriculture department's Human Nutrition Centre.

The average child watches 25,000 commercials a year, she said, more than half of them for food products. One-tenth of the $5 billion spent annually on food advertising is aimed directly at children.

"Children are particularly susceptible because they lack the maturity to consider commercials rationally," she said. "Have you ever met a child who didn't trust Ronald MacDonald or Tony the Tiger?"

Pacemaker check over phone soon

LORAIN, Ohio (AP) — A new invention will soon make it possible for heart specialists in Lorain to make inexpensive house calls — by telephone — for patients with pacemakers.

By using the teltrace telephone electrocardiogram (EKG) system, physicians at St. Joseph Hospital can monitor heart patients with pacemakers whenever they call. The system is said to be easy to use.

A patient attaches a pocket-sized transmitter to the telephone, dials a special hospital number and then holds the telephone to his or her chest while a hospital attendant puts the receiver in the EKG machine.

In the 30-second process, the transmitter picks up electrical signals from the patient's heart and pacemaker, converts them to sound and relays them by telephone to the hospital's receiving unit.

Compromise urged inquest for the 'natural'

WINNIPEG (CP) — People should realize that natural foods are not always good and food additives are not always bad, says Dr. Don Murray, head of the University of Manitoba's food science department.

"There are risks in swimming, driving, in a shot of alcohol, skiing, swimming, smoking," Murray said. "We accept those risks. But we don't seem to be able to accept that in food there is also an element of risk.

"Considering the state of the art, of testing methods and the understanding that just isn't there, I believe it's totally impossible to have 100-per-cent safe foods," Murray told a recent seminar organized by the Consumers' Association of Canada.

He said the danger in food additives is considered by researchers less threatening than food poisoning, malnutrition, environmental concerns, natural poisons such as arsenic and cyanide and residues such as herbicides and pesticides.

Not only do additives often preserve out-of-season foods, but they often can save people from food problems considered more hazardous. One example is the controversial additive nitrate which is a valuable preservative, Murray said.

"When you put the whole thing in balance, I think it comes out positive."

Gwen Leslie, a federal health protection branch officer, said Canada has 347 approved food additives, compared with 2,000 in the United States — including such subtances as vitamins and pesticides which Canada deals with differently because the government does not consider them food additives.

For a new additive to be put on the list, the government has to be assured that it is safe — and that means tests costing about $25 million, Ms. Leslie said.

She said that 70 additives have been approved in the last 15 years, while at the same time 40 were deleted.

"So I guess I find it hard to really panic about any new ones."

Murray said improving test techniques have contributed to the increased consumer consciousness about food additives.

Tests can now measure the presence of substances to the parts per trillion, he said, "so we're finding out that what was zero (free of additives) 20 years ago isn't the same zero today."

Testing techniques also have changed, Murray said. Instead of hiring people to test foods, as was done in earlier days, animals are fed the chemical in question.

"The levels fed to rats amount to 1,600 pounds a day in terms of food consumption," he said, so there are difficulties in applying results of tests on animals to people on balanced diets.

In relative terms, human consumption of food additives is very low, Murray said.

Of the 139 pounds of food additives and chemicals an average person eats in a year, 114 pounds are sweeteners, 15 pounds are salt and nine pounds are acids — as found in soft drinks — leaving only a pound a year of other additives.

Pastures leased to mushroom folk

The B.C. Court of Appeal has ruled that possession of so-called magic mushrooms is not an offence under the federal Food and Drug Act — and some Vancouver Island farmers are already making hay on the situation.

In the Comox Valley, a small number farmers who last year were up in arms protecting their property from mushroom pickers have been "charging admission" to their fields, one Courtenay area resident told The Times Wednesday.

"They have said, 'Look, you pay me $10 a day — or a thousand for the season — and you can pick and I'll keep everyone else off'," said the resident, who asked not to be identified.

He said the irony is that of the few farmers allegedly doing this, "most are those who made the loudest noise last year about trespassers."

He said he himself came back from a family drive and found a car with Quebec licence plates blocking the driveway to his Black Creek home while the occupants were scouring his field for mushrooms.

In the Comox Valley and most other areas this year has been a poor one for growing the so-called magic mushrooms — mainly because of the dry-trend experienced around the province.

Last year, however, the crop there was good and there were a dozen-odd arrests and a similar number of convictions for posession of the psilocybin-containing fungus.

A conspicuous problem with the harvest was that it created social friction in that agricultural area, with the farmers' main complaint being that livestock was threatened by gates being left open; crops trampled and articles taken from barns and storage sheds.

There were physical threats between pickers and valley residents, and often people who looked like the types who would pick the hallucinogenic mushroom were confronted and questioned by special RCMP teams assigned only to the mushroom beat.

Most conspicuous hunters were those coming from outside the province.

"You know when a purple van with stained glass windows, tape deck blaring and bearing Ontario plates comes down your driveway they aren't going to be asking for directions to the public library," said a Merville landowner.

Death kept secret from young people

OTTAWA (CP) — Parents shouldn't try to keep their children in a sugar-plum world by shielding them from the realities of death, says Dr. Mary Brown, an Ottawa clinical psychologist.

Addressing a conference on children and death this week, she said children not given the facts of death often end up with miscontrued or frightening impressions.

"They often feel they somehow are responsible for the person's death or they think they'll be the next to go because they don't understand the circumstances," she said.

Dr. Brown said studies have shown as many as 40 per cent of families don't tell the child when a member of the family has died.

"Sooner or later the child is going to find out the truth, either from a neighbor or a relative. Then he'll be angry and mistrustful of the parent who didn't tell him the truth in the first place."

Rabbi Earl Grollman, a member of a special bereavement group at Harvard University, said parents often glossed over the reality of death when talking to their children because they aren't sure of their own feelings.

"We use escapist terms like passed away, expired, departed, because we don't want to face up to the fact that we're all mortal and it's going to happen to us someday."

He said children should be allowed to attend funerals if they want to.

"When the child has been shut out of the proceedings, they can feel they're being punished for something they did."

Joy Rogers, a mental health consultant with the Clarke Institute of Psychiatry in Toronto, said children are becoming victims of the inability of North Americans to face up to death as an inevitable part of life.

Schools used to lower flags to half mast and make an announcement to the student body when a school member died, but that is rarely done now, she said.

Odd syndrome tied to stress

TORONTO (CP) — Tourette's Syndrome — the disease which makes people twitch, yelp, grimace and grunt — is more prevalent than suspected and causes unnecessary suffering through mis-diagnosis, a Halifax doctor says.

Dr. T. J. Murray told a meeting of the Tourette Syndrome Foundation of Canada on Monday that the Tourette Society of the United States received 250 replies when it ran an advertisment seeking persons who "twitch, yelp, grimace and grunt uncontrollably."

Later, when similar publicity was directed to rural areas there were 5,000 responses, underlining the theory that Tourette's is more common due to stress in city life.

Most Tourette's patients are "bright, intelligent, successful people," said Murray, chief of medicine at Camp Hill Hospital in Halifax.

Murray became interested in the neurological condition because he felt many people were not being recognized or treated, causing them unnecessary suffering, especially in childhood.

John Vespasiani was one who suffered because of misdiagnosis. When he was 10 he came home one day and told his mother: " I'm insane, I must be."

"They say there's nothing wrong with me but I can't stop doing these things."

FEVER: The controls gone all awry

By JANE E. BRODY
New York Times

One of the special characteristics of mammals is their ability to maintain a stable body temperature despite a wide range in environmental temperatures. This is what it means to be warm-blooded. A tiny section of the brain called the hypothalamus houses the body's thermostat, which is normally set at about 98.6 degrees Fahrenheit, give or take a degree or two.

When it's cold outside relative to our internal temperature, our surface blood vessels contract to reduce heat loss and our muscles quiver (shiver) to produce more heat. When it's hot, our surface blood vessels dilate and we lose heat through the evaporation of sweat. We can assist the workings of our natural heat-control system by putting on or taking off clothes or heating or cooling the surrounding air.

Sometimes, however, the internal controls seem to go awry, resulting in a rise in body temperature — or what is commonly called fever.

Fever is a symptom that can have a number of causes, some more serious than others. Fever may result from a resetting of the body's central thermostat triggered by an infectious organism or toxic chemical.

It can follow an inability of the body's cooling mechanisms to keep up with internally generated or externally imposed heat, such as from exercising vigorously, overdressing or staying too long in a sauna. Or it can result from a defect in the body's heat loss mechanisms, such as from a bad sunburn, certain antidepressant drugs or heat stroke.

In the most common type of fever, infectious organisms cause the white blood cells to release a protein called endogenous pyrogen. Pyrogen travels to the brain where it stimulates the resetting of the body's thermostat at a higher level. For unknown reasons, an infection-caused fever almost never rises higher than 106 degrees and techniques used to reduce a high fever do not lower it below "normal" body temperature.

Fever has a number of unpleasant effects. It dehydrates and enervates. It may cause headache, loss of appetite, nausea and vomiting. And it often causes chills; you shiver because your thermostat is now set higher than usual relative to the surrounding air and your body must generate more heat to maintain that higher temperature.

Fevers above 103 in an adult may upset mental processes temporarily, causing a lack of judgment, confusion or even delirium. Young children can suffer convulsions from a very rapid rise in body temperature, but once a high fever develops, convulsion is unlikely. According to the best available evidence, these febrile convulsions, though frightening, are not dangerous and do not cause brain damage.

The higher your fever, the worse you're likely to feel. But it doesn't necessarily follow that you're more seriously ill when your fever is high than when it's only a degree or two above normal. Babies and young children have incompletely developed heat-regulating systems, so they tend to run high temperatures even from minor infections.

A child with a strep throat that requires medical treatment may have a temperature of only 100, whereas a flu-like illness that needs only symptomatic care may send the temperature soaring to 104. Premature infants and elderly persons, on the other hand, rarely run high fevers. They can have serious infections and no fever at all.

How can you know, then, when to take a fever seriously? In children, any of the following circumstances should prompt a call to the doctor:

— If a temperature above 101 orally or 102 rectally persists for more than a day.

— If a fever of 104 or higher lasts for four hours and doesn't go down in response to fever-reducing drugs.

— If any fever, even a low one, persists for four or more days.

— If the child is less than four months old.

— If other worrisome symptoms are present, such as rash, sore throat, earache, bad cough, breathing difficulties, extreme lethargy, vomiting, diarrhea or stiff neck.

An adult should also check out a persistent temperature or one associated with possibly serious symptoms such as the above.

In reporting a fever to the doctor, note the time of day, how it was measured and any trends. Body temperature normally fluctuates during the day — usually lowest first thing in the morning, highest in the late afternoon or evening. A child sent to school with a normal temperature in the morning may come home feverish at 3 o'clock. If a child has been sick with a fever, it's usually wise to keep him or her home for one extra day after the temperature returns to normal.

The main purpose in treating a fever, as opposed to treating its underlying cause, is to relieve discomfort. In some cases, such as when the doctor wants to see if an antibiotic is working, it may be preferable to let a fever run its course. Artificial lowering of the temperature may also make it difficult to know when an illness is really over.

The most effective treatment for fever due to illness is aspirin or acetaminophen, both of which lower the set point of the body's thermostat. Without such lowering, other measures to bring down fever, such as sponging, are futile in the long run, since the temperature will quickly rise again.

The drug treatment should be repeated every three or four hours as directed to keep the thermostat at its new lower setting. If vomiting interferes with giving the drug by mouth, rectal aspirin suppositories are available at pharmacies. Acetaminophen, which can be obtained in liquid form, may be easier to administer to a very young child; it is also less likely to upset the stomach.

In addition to blocking the action of pyrogens on the body thermostat, fever-reducing drugs stimulate sweating and dilation of surface blood vessels, which help to cool you down. This is the familiar sensation of the fever "breaking;" it commonly occurs during the night and you may wake up soaked with sweat but feeling a lot better than when you went to sleep.

Caffeine raises body temperature and can block the effects of fever-reducing drugs, so it may be wise to avoid drinking coffee, tea and cola and taking caffeine-containing drugs (for example, Anacin and Excedrin) when you have a fever.

A person with fever-induced chills is likely to curl up under a pile of covers. This only delays the lowering of body temperature. It is better to wear only light clothing and use a sheet or thin blanket as a cover. It's also wise to keep the room temperature low (70 or below).

You can help to cool a child with a high fever by sponging him with tepid water or placing him in a tepid bath. Do not use alcohol; the vapors can be harmful. And cold water or ice is unnecessarily drastic and painful.

Exercise under study as blood sugar curb

BOSTON (AP) — Regular daily exercise may help diabetics and people who are overweight reduce their high levels of blood sugar, a medical researcher says.

The research, conducted at Yale Medical School, found that men who exercised regularly had a 30-percent increase in their bodies' absorption of sugar.

The study was conducted on six healthy men who pedalled stationary cycles for an hour at a time. They exercised four times a week for six weeks.

The results of the study, directed by Dr. Vijay Soman, were published in Thursday's issue of the New England Journal of Medicine.

In an interview, Soman said he repeated his study on diabetic patinents and found that exercise significantly reduced their blood sugar, too.

The study of healthy men revealed that after exercise, insulin was more likely to attach itself to white blood cells, which is one of the ways that the hormone circulates through the body.

Insulin controls the body's storage and use of sugar and other fuels that are taken in as food. Insulin ensures that these fuels are kept at relatively constant levels in the blood stream.

Show biz in a very hot tub

scott's world
by vernon scott

HOLLYWOOD (UPI) — The cleanest and warmest blonde in TV unquestionably is Lois Areno, the curvesome cutie who spends most of her time in The Ropers series-dunking in a hot tub.

Lois soaks for at least two hours a day during dress rehearsal and taping of the half-hour sitcom starring Norman Fell and Audra Lindley as maxi-incompatible marrieds.

Fell, in the role of Stanley Roper (comically impotent in his marriage) suffers paroxysms of lechery at the sight of bikini-clad Lois who is only partially submerged in the Ropers' apartment complex hot tub.

As Debbie Hopper, an airline stewardess, Lois provides a classic example of jiggle show pulchritude to prime time viewing. Some might construe Debbie to be little more than a bawdy wink.

Debbie doubtless delights Playboy readers who salivate at the sight of expanses of female epidermis and infuriates feminists who cry out against female sexual exploitation.

Lois takes a dim view of both. She agrees there are erotic and subliminal sexual overtones to her role. All the same, she thinks sex is a healthy element of the show, one that shouldn't be suppressed.

If Lois (as Debbie) were sitting fully clothed at, say, a bridge table or at a desk every week instead of in a hot tub, she might be just another pretty girl with so-so prospects of advancing her career.

But because her full figure is regularly and amply on display, Lois has attracted considerable attention among Hollywood directors and producers as well as with viewers who, by the hundreds, request autographed bikini photos.

"I don't see Debbie as being exploitive of women," Lois said in answer to charges that the stewardess is a fantasy figure for immature males.

"Women writers invariably ask me if I feel Debbie is against the women's lib movement. My answer is a flat 'no.' I'm a feminist myself, but within reason.

"Spice works for television. I'm all for it when it's handled subtly. My bikini is as teenie as the network allows. I like wearing it. I'm proud of the part I play. If I weren't, I wouldn't be doing it.

"Women's bodies are esthetic if they're in good shape. Denying spice is like saying there is no such thing as a woman.

"Show business is show business and you utilize anything you can to increase your worth. A girl would be a fool not to utilize her body if she can combine it with talent.

"What catches the initial attention on television is a beautiful package. Then if you can substantiate the package with talent you have a salable commodity that is in demand.

"My part is more than just decorative. It's not easy to be a straight man and set up comedy lines for Norman and Jeff Tambor in the show. It takes very fine and expert timing.

"I also have to concentrate on dead-pan delivery. Almost all my dialogue involves double entendre because essentially Debbie is innocent and naive. That's what makes the sexual overtones funny instead of blatant.

"I don't play Debbie as just another dumb blonde. She's really not aware that Stanley Roper leches after her.

"It's a God-given law of nature that if you're feminine you are soft and round. I don't believe in fighting that natural advantage by being masculine and aggressive.

"You don't have to be tough to be assertive. I defy any woman to be more feminine than I am.

"And while I believe in the woman's movement, I think it's beautiful for a woman to pamper, serve and cater to a man. I wouldn't like to lose that attitude at the peril of losing my identity.

"My attitude about the difference in the sexes is my heritage — biologically as a woman and racially as an Italian."

Lois is no hothouse flower. She's a rated aiplane pilot with some 400 hours of solo flight in single and twin-engine aircraft. She hopes to earn her commercial instrument rating next year.

She studied for two years at the University of Florence (Italy) and graduated with a degree in psychology from Temple University in her native Philadelphia.

John Wayne's face to make a million

LOS ANGELES (Reuter) — Australian sculptor Brett-Livingstone Strong says John Wayne's face will earn him $1 million.

Strong, 26, carved a likeness of the late film star's face out of a 10,000-kilogram chunk of stone, which he bought for $100.

It was part of the so-called malibu rock, which threatened to crash onto a Pacific coastal highway here until it was removed by a demolition crew last February.

Strong said on Wednesday that an estate agent, Tom Murphy, has agreed to pay him $1 million for his work during the next five years.

Murphy said the stone will be shown in the United States and he intends to sell bronze replicas of the work for as much as $3,000 each.

Why they're leaving the Navy

By RICHARD HALLORAN

NORFOLK, Va.(NYT) — Herbert F. Wilt, a sonar specialist aboard the aircraft carrier Eisenhower; Gregory A. McCann, an electronics technician on the destroyer Radford, and Robert L. Stefan, a machinist's mate on the attack submarine Memphis, are all trained, skilled and experienced — and they are all planning to leave the Navy soon.

They are but three of many senior enlisted men and women who are quitting the Navy after about eight years of service. Each has his own reasons, of course, but all seem to share two:

—The Navy requires them to be away from their families for what to them seems too long for peacetime. Their warships are often sent to sea or abroad for up to six out of every 13 to 15 months.

—Each can make much more money, often doubling his income, in private industry. Those leaving the Navy can work at easier jobs, at regular hours, and for shorter times to make that money.

"They're leaving because we're driving them so hard," an admiral here said. "We are pushing our sailors today harder than we ever have before in my 27 years in the fleet."

Although the Navy says it is manning the ships in the fleet at nearly at nearly full strength, senior officers acknowledge that readiness has been hurt and will be hurt more as the trend continues.

The Atlantic fleet alone is suffering a shortage of at least 10 percent among enlisted men and women with senior ratings. This means that younger and less experienced personnel steer the ships, listen to the sonar and watch the radar, operate the nuclear or sophisticated power plants, and aim and fire the guns, missiles, torpedoes and depth charges.

A senior admiral in Washington has estimated that submarines are going to sea with only 65 percent of the experience required in training and man hours of experience. A submarine officer here said that sophisticated machinery was helping to overcome that. But he said that in sonar, for instance, "there is no substitute for an experienced pair of ears."

The Navy's commitments are among the basic causes for the pressure on the sailors. The Navy is required to keep two aircraft carriers in the Mediterranean at all times, along with 30 other vessels. Other surface ships are on antisubmarine patrol or in joint maneuvers with South American navies or on other drills.

Ballistic missile or attack submarines, all nuclear powered, cruise submerged for the better part of 120 days at a time, limited only by the supply of food and the endurance of the crew.

But the Navy has fewer ships than ever before in the post-World War II period to fulfill those commitments, the admirals contend, and thus must run those in the fleet as hard as they can.

Wilt, the sonar specialist aboard the Eisenhower, was promoted to chief petty officer last August after eight years service, a relatively short time and an indication of the regard with which his superiors regard his skills.

He said in a recent interview: "The primary reason I'm leaving is family separation from my wife, who lives in Florida."

He said that money was less a factor in his decision that what he called the "arbitrary assignment" from antisubmarine patrol to the aircraft carrier, where the Navy said he was needed.

McCann, the electronics technician on the destroyer Radford, also has eight years service and is about to be promoted from petty officer first class to chief. He has a wife and two children and said: "I like the Navy but I love my family and you can't have both at once."

He expects to have little difficulty next year when he leaves the Navy and begins looking for a job, either at an airport servicing or operating electronic equipment or with an electronics company. He makes about $12,000 now and thinks he can get $20,000 to start outside.

"If I had stayed married, I would have gotten out," he said. The separation from his wife — because of six-month deployments to the Mediterranean — played a large part in the breakup of his marriage, he said.

The closest of the three to leaving is the machinist's mate in the submarine Memphis, Stefan, who is also trained and experienced in nuclear power-plant operation. He will be leaving this month and has already had several job offers in the $20,000 range.

He said that money was a contributing factor in his decision to leave but not the main one. "I have a wife and a 4-year-old child and I spend too much time at sea, he said. "That's a big part of my decision."

Lightning's jab really complex

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI) — Lightning bolts are actually "unbelievably complex" systems of smaller electrified branches within storm clouds, government researchers said Tuesday.

Scientists at the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration's Severe Storms Laboratory in Norman, Okla., reported on their latest research during the annual convention of the American Geophysical Union.

One of the scientists, William Taylor, said the research team attempted to pinpoint the altitude at which lightning begins in a thunderstorm, generally three to four miles high, and spreads across the sky at nearly a quarter of a million miles per hour.

"We've found that the first electrical activity we see in each flash occurs about one kilometre above the region of main lightning activity, which is concentrated about four and six kilometres' altitude," he said.

"Intra-cloud lightning tends to be higher, some of it above 10 kilometres. Most discharges begin near the updraft — or weak radar-echo — area of the storm at speeds of about 100,000 metres per second.

"More and more, we see a terrific complexity in lightning. As we become able to examine lightning in greater and greater detail, it grows progressively more complex."

Smoke always rises? Not when passengers fired up

NEW YORK (AP) — It was a variation on Three Little Pigs at 15,000 feet: When the non-smoker huffed and the smokers puffed, the pilot brought their plane down.

Capt. Larry Kinsey was at the controls Wednesday when "an insurrection" between smokers and non-smokers led him to land the Eastern Airlines Washington-to-New York 8 a.m. shuttle at Baltimore-Washington International Airport in Linthicum, Md.

Some of the 177 passengers cancelled out in Maryland, but the rest were put aboard another plane with a new crew, arriving at New York nearly three hours late.

The problem: A non-smoker seated in the smoking section of the filled 727 demanded his area be made non-smoking. When it was, some of the adjacent passengers, who thought they were still in a smoking area, lit up.

At that point, just about everyone got fired up.

Eastern spokesman Gil Perlroth said the non-smoker was first offered a seat on the next flight. When he turned down that offer, and a call for a volunteer to change seats went unanswered, the non-smoking section was expanded. The U.S. Civil Aeronautics Board says airlines must provide enough seats in a non-smoking section to accommodate all non-smokers.

Then the neighboring passengers refused to obey the pilot's order to stop smoking.

"I'll show you how it's done," a senior flight attendant quoted the non-smoker, identified as Richard Lent, a Washington, D.C., tax lawyer, as saying to his companions just before the ruckus began.

Lent denied making the comment, saying all he wanted was a non-smoking seat. "Once I got that, I was out of it. The rest of what happened didn't involve me."

He also denied having demanded that smokers near him stop, adding that he had not threatened legal action. He acknowledged threatening to complain to the aeronautics board.

"It was silly and childish," said Emory Kristof, a passenger from Washington. "I haven't seen a display like this since kindergarten. We had to land the plane and sort out everybody's dollies and metal toys."

Kristof said that after Lent threatened legal action against the airline because those around him were "assaulting him with smoke," Kinsey "appealed to everyone's sense of reason" by pointing out he couldn't have an insurrection on his aircraft.

Kristof quoted the pilot as saying that if the situation remained unstable, he would land the plane at the nearest airport.

Passenger Harry Fisdell, executive vice-president of the New York Newspaper Guild, said the dispute began when Lent demanded that everyone near him stop smoking.

Then, Fisdell said, "The pilot came on and said: 'Those in the smoking section, smoke.' "

Fisdell said that Kinsey then announced: "I'm telling you people, this insurrection has to stop or I'm going to land the plane."

Two minutes later, he did.

By CRISTINE RUSSELL
Washington Star Service

WASHINGTON — Death rates decreased in the 1970s for men and women of all ages, but there was still a wide gap between the races in over-all health status, the U.S. government reported Wednesday.

Statistics compiled by the Department of Health, Education and Welfare found that death rates were far higher for blacks, American Indians, and Alaskan natives, particularly in the younger and middle age groups.

The death rate for blacks aged 25 to 44 was nearly 2½ times as high as the rate for whites of that age group, with violent causes of death — accidents and homicide — "especially high," according to the report.

Infant mortality for black babies also remained twice as high as that for white infants, in the latest figures.

However, Asian Americans of all ages generally fared better than whites in the mortality statistics.

The differences in death rates among races may reflect differences in income and educational levels. Asians had the highest levels of income and education and the lowest death rates, while blacks had the lowest income and educational levels and the highest death rates, the report noted.

Comparable death rates for Hispanic Americans were not available.

A wide-ranging compilation of figures on the nation's health is sent to Congress each year. In releasing the 1979 report, HEW Secretary Patricia R. Harris said that the "data in this report clearly indicate progress in extending health care to all groups, in building the national supply of health care resources, and in reducing premature and preventable deaths."

"However," she added, "it is also clear that major unresolved problems, including spiraling costs and differentials in health status, will move with us into the 1980s."

While the report showed that in general the health status of minority groups fell behind that of whites, the delivery of health care has become more nearly equal among race and income groups.

Roughly three-fourths of blacks and whites received physician care during 1977. Low-income families had even higher rates of physician visits that year than families with income levels over $25,000.

But, noted the HEW status report, since low-income families generally had greater health care problems, the volume of service may still be low. There is also a major deficiency in dental care for minorities, the report found.

The American health update also included the following figures: — Overall life expectancy at birth continued to increase, reaching a record 73.2 years in 1977. The gain from 1970 to 1977 was nearly twice the gain of the 1960s. — The decrease in deaths from heart disease in the first seven years of the 1970s was close to that in the entire 20-year period from 1950 to 1970. — National health care expenditures more than doubled in the 1970s to a 1978 total of $192.4 billion. — After the rapid increases of the mid-1960s, hospital use stabilized between 1972 and 1977. — The supply of physicians continued to grow in the 1970s, increasing by 22 percent from 1970 to 1977. — Geographical variations in the number of available physicians decreased.

The report was prepared by the Public Health Service's National Center for Health Statistics, assisted by the National Center for Health Services Research.

Brazil boffins find fuel in trees

SAO PAULO, Brazil (UPI) — Brazilian scientists are running diesel engines on oil from soybeans, peanuts, castor seeds and sunflowers and plan to grow "forests of energy" they predict will make the country a major exporter to oil-hungry nations.

Scientists in the Amazon jungle capital of Manaus and in the industrial metropolis of Sao Paulo have begun intensive studies of more than 400 species of native trees they say can provide everything from diesel fuel to petrochemical feedstocks.

"It won't happen in the next 10 years, but in the future Brazil will become one of the major exporters of biomass (energy)," predicted Ulf Schuchard, a German chemist at the University of Campinas outside Sao Paulo.

The Manaus scientists are testing species of the copaiba tree, a Brazilian plant that produces up to 26 gallons a year of an oil with a chemical composition that is close to diesel.

"It's a perfect substitute for diesel in engines. They can run without modifications," said Jose Guilherme Maia, coordinator of the copaiba project at the National Amazonian Research Institute in Manaus.

Consumption is slightly higher than regular gasoline because copaiba burns cooler, but performance is the same, Maia said.

Brazil already is using alcohol grown from sugarcane to power conventional cars in a 20 percent-80 percent mixture with gasoline and its 1-million-vehicle a year auto industry will produce 250,000 cars running on pure alcohol in 1980.

In addition to alcohol and the copaiba product, oil from soybeans, peanuts, castor seeds and sunflowers is being used to run diesel engines by experts at Sao Paulo's Institute of Technological Research.

Maia's group has been studying the copaiba for two years and has been running a Toyota pickup on it for the past 12 months without any problems.

The spur to Brazil's search for alternative sources of energy is its dependence on imported petroleum, which accounts for 85 percent of its total consumption and is expected to consume half the country's $15 billion export income in 1979.

Last week, the government raised the price of gasoline from $1.80 a gallon to $2.80.

But Brazil, which is larger than the continental United States, has vast land areas which can be used to grow forests of energy, researchers say.

There may come a time when the world's growing population will force countries to choose between growing food and biomass energy, said Schuchard.

A spokesman for General Motors of Brazil said his company dropped experiments using castor oil to power diesel engines because the cost of the fuel was prohibitively expensive.

But Schuchard said tree oil can be economical if the rest of the tree also is used — and that's what his team is working on.

This waste is submitted to pressure of 200 atmospheres and heated to 392 F to produce phenols and aromatic carbonic acids.

These can be used as raw materials by chemical firms that currently buy costly petroleum byproducts, he said.

Schuchard said his process "can be used by any country" but is most feasible for nations like Brazil that have good climate and plentiful land.

"It will cost Brazil almost nothing" to use trees, he said.

Earthquake watch kept by eye in sky

By JOHN N. WILFORD
New York Times

NEW YORK — A small artificial satellite passes 4,000 miles overhead. From a ground station, in Australia or on a Pacific atoll, in Brazil or along the San Andreas Fault in California, a pulse of intense, sharply focused light issues every second the satellite is within range.

The pulsed laser light is reflected off the satellite and returns to the ground station in a fraction of a second, becoming a component in the measurement of earth's restless surface. From such measurements on a global scale scientists expect over the next few years to pinpoint more precisely the sites of places for mapping and to study movement of the earth's crust in earthquake regions.

Seven new laser satellite-tracking stations went into operation last month in a major expansion of the international efforts to apply space technology to the ancient earth-measuring science of geodesy. There are now 16 such stations, operated by the United States and several European nations, that bounce laser pulses off orbiting satellites, primarily the National Aeronautics and Space Administration's Laser Geodynamics Satellite, or Lageos, which was launched in 1976.

The seven new stations are at American Samoa, Kwajalein Atoll in the Marshall Islands, Yaragadee in Western Australia, Owens Valley and Goldstone, Calif., Fort Davis, Tex., and near Haystack Observatory north of Boston. Other stations are in Maryland, Florida, eastern Australia, Brazil, Peru, France, Spain, West Germany and the Netherlands.

"We're only just beginning in a worldwide sense," Dr. David E. Smith of NASA's Goddard Space Flight Center, the project scientist, said in an interview last week. "We want eventually to install stations or have access to stations in Africa, Turkey, India, the Soviet Union and China."

At least two stations, preferably three or more, are situated on each of several of the dozen large tectonic plates, those continent-size floating pieces of the earth's crust that are in constant motion and whose jagged edges grind against each other. The largest number of earthquakes occur at plate boundaries.

Geodesists have for several years sought to measure the movements of these plates, usually no more than an inch or two a year, to determine changes affecting their framework for maps and perhaps to detect subsurface stresses that could presage an earthquake.

At first they used the more traditional ground surveying techniques. But they are slow, subject to cumulative errors and anything but global.

This is being remedied through satellite geodesy involving laser-ranging techniques. The Lageos satellite is equipped with quartz reflectors on its outer surface. By timing the round-trip travel time of laser pulses bounced off the satellite, geodesists can make measurements to an accuracy of a few inches. When such measurements are made from several stations, it is possible to deduce the relative locations of the stations. Then, when the measurements are repeated, it is possible to determine if the station sites have changed in relation to each other.

Smith said that satellite measurements in recent years had begun to show more precisely the rate and direction of crustal motion at the San Andreas Fault, which is where the North American and Pacific plates abut.

The American part of the research effort is being conducted by NASA, the United States Geological Survey, the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, the National Science Foundation and the Defense Mapping Agency. This is part of a program, authorized by Congress in 1977, to study ways to reduce the hazards of earthquakes and develop, if possible, the capability to predict earthquakes and possibly control them.

In 1974, geodesists introduced astronomical radio interferometric earth surveying, or Aries, which determines distances on earth by comparing the radio signals from quasars received by two separate antennas. A radio signal from a single source, such as those distant and enigmatic quasars, reaches two antennas at different times. In Aries, the signal's arrival is timed by atomic clocks at each antenna. The difference in arrival times at the two points is computed to determine the ground distance between the two points, to an accuracy of about one inch over 300 miles. This technique has been employed for several years in measuring changes along the San Andreas Fault.

But the large radio antennas needed to listen in on quasars are expensive and not very mobile. This shortcoming is expected to be remedied in the next decade through a new geodetic technique known as satellite emission radio interferometric earth surveying, or Series.

Australia, N.Z. unity call rising

By J. C. GRAHAM
CP Correspondent

AUCKLAND, N.Z. (CP) — While pressures for separatism are a basic problem for some countries, the reverse situation applies in the South Pacific.

Demands for closer unity between Australia and New Zealand are rising. Separatists are on the defensive in seeking to maintain individual sovereignty.

Calls for closer links focus mainly on economic measures but there have been suggestions that the two countries should unite.

Logically there seems a great deal in favor of union. The two countries are "old Commonwealth" nations, predominantly white, English-speaking democracies isolated in the depths of the South Pacific, with close links in culture, tradition, language, political systems, living standards, and strategic interests.

While competitive in some fields, the economies have become increasingly complementary. Australia relies substantially on mineral and industrial strength while New Zealand is predominantly a primary producer. With a population of little more than three million, New Zealand is too small a market to prosper independently in the modern world.

New Zealand has adamantly opposed political union for more than a century. The Australians are less vehement. They tend to see New Zealanders as country cousins who would benefit from integration with a bigger and more powerful neighbor.

The rather patronizing attitude of some Australians reinforces the arguments of New Zealanders against becoming too closely involved with the giant next door. New Zealanders feel that with union they would become just another Australian state like New South Wales, Victoria, Queensland or, more likely, the obscure offshore island state of Tasmania.

Asked what reason they can advance against union with Australia, New Zealanders sometimes reply: 2,000 reasons. (The distance across the Tasman Sea between the two countries is about 2,000 kilometres.)

In fact New Zealanders tend to bristle at Australian assumptions. A former Australian prime minister, Gough Whitlam, recently remarked that links with Australia were the best hope for New Zealand, and added that New Zealand had been basically an offshore English farm.

A New Zealand publication tersely retorted: And Australia, basically an offshore English prison?

Much of early settlement in Australia was by convicts deported from England. New Zealand was never a penal settlement.

Nevertheless new initiatives are being taken for closer ties. The Australian deputy prime minister, Doug Anthony, and his New Zealand counterpart, Brian Talboys, have recently spoken in favor of further efforts for revised economic links.

A limited free-trade agreement was signed 13 years ago and has resulted in barriers in many items of trade being lowered or abolished.

But both sides acknowledge that something more is needed.

Suggestions range from a wider free-trade area to a customs union, a monetary union, or an economic community. As a preliminary, a committee of officials has been set up to study various possibilities.

In a few other respects the countries are already much closer than most in the divided modern world. For instance, Australians and New Zealanders can travel freely from one country to the other without identity documents and do not need work permits or other papers.

Yet full union is still remote. One inhibiting factor is that the prime ministers have a rather frosty relationship. Although Australia's Malcolm Fraser and New Zealand's Robert Muldooon are on the same side of the political fence — right of centre — their personalities clash.

Winter Driving Notice

Snow Area Spot Checks

At this time of year and in areas subject to heavy snow conditions, you will often see special signs requiring that your vehicle have good winter-tread tires or carry chains or, in some cases, that chains be mounted. For your safety and that of other motorists, these signs are authorized by law.

During the next few weeks, random checks will be carried out by the RCMP in problem driving areas, more particularly the Hope-Princeton, the Squamish Highway to Whistler, the Fraser Canyon, but including other sections of road on Vancouver Island and the rest of the province, subject to snow conditions. The operation will be in conjunction with the Attorney-General's "Counterattack" programme. Drivers of vehicles not properly equipped may be turned back or charged.

The Ministry of Transportation and Highways is doing its best to clear snow and maintain our roads in winter to make them safe. Before driving into snow areas, make sure you have good winter tires and are carrying chains to make your vehicle safe. Watch for snow removal equipment, special signing, and please drive carefully.

Nuclear puzzle of the century

By Nicholas Moore

LONDON (Reuter) — It promises to remain the nuclear puzzle of the century.

The evidence publicly available in the West now suggests that in late 1957 or early 1958 a nuclear accident occurred in the Soviet Union, contaminating an area in the Ural Mountains close to the city of Kyshtym.

Western experts, however, cannot agree on just what might have happened or how bad it was — and the Soviets are not saying anything.

The clues come from a variety of sources, including a heavily censored file made public in 1977 by the U.S. Central Intelligence Agency.

"We crossed a strange, uninhabited and unfarmed area," the report quotes an informant who travelled in the Kyshtym region in 1961.

"Highway signs along the way warned drivers not to stop for the next 20 to 30 kilometres because of radiation.

"The land was empty. There were no villages, no towns, no people, no cultivated land — only the chimneys of destroyed houses remained."

Zhores Medvedev, a dissident Soviet scientist who now is in exile in Britain, in 1976 made the story into headline news.

He said hundreds of people were killed in a nuclear disaster near Kyshtym which contaminated an area of hundreds of square kilometres.

Medvedev has just published a book in support of his contention. A distinguished biologist, he heard the rumors about a nuclear accident when he was working in the Soviet Union.

If, he reasoned, radioactivity had indeed contaminated a large area, fellow Soviet scientists would have lost no time in carrying out studies there.

So he scoured Soviet scientific literature to find a series of articles which did seem to have used a large contaminated zone for research.

Medvedev found that research was done on two lakes and on a land area contaminated with high levels of strontium 90 and cesium 137.

From the biological species dealt with in the Soviet writings, he placed the area east of Kyshtym and measured it in hundreds of square kilometres.

Having concluded that contamination did occur, Medvedev went on to interpret his evidence and to suggest how it might have happened.

His theory is that waste from early Soviet military plutonium reactors near Kyshtym was buried or leaked into the ground. A plutonium chain reaction occurred and, in some sort of explosion or volcano-like eruption, highly radioactive material was vaporized and dispersed by westerly winds.

Sir John Hill, chairman of the British Atomic Energy Authority, says Medvedev's book was "an excellent piece of scientific investigation to prove that something very unpleasant happened in the Urals about 20 years ago."

But he adds that "it cannot be recommended as a reliable analysis of what did in fact take place."

Sir John, writing in Britain's New Scientist, says the evidence was too sparse to speculate confidently but the disaster could have involved, not buried waste, but an accident at a primitive nuclear plant itself.

Medvedev also has been challenged in a recent issue of the U.S. journal Science, by four physicists including Harold Agnew, a former director of the Los Alamos science laboratory where the first atom bomb was developed.

Early men left few clues

TORONTO (CP) — For Peter Storck, the last five summers spent combing beaches have not been an idyllic dream-come-true, but a diligent attempt to weave a few sketchy clues into a picture of the first men who inhabited this area of the continent almost 13,000 years ago.

Storck, an archaelogist and curator at the Royal Ontario Museum, has found traces of the first man in Ontario along what was once the beach of a glacial lake.

A fossil beach formed by Lake Algonguin, which once overflowed the basins of today's Lake Huron and Georgian Bay, flooding most of southwestern Ontario and extending its chilly finger-like bays south toward Lake Simcoe and Toronto, has yielded Storck's greatest clues.

But Storck, 38, says these early men disappeared as mystically as they appeared, leaving behind only a handful of stone spearheads and thousands of tiny pieces of chert, a dull quartz.

And he says that's all they left behind. No charcoal from a firepit, no burial grounds and no biological hints of what they looked like.

But he sees the men as a hunters and gatherers, who used their ingenuity to survive, to travel the continent in search of food, and to kill the giant 400-pound beavers, the elephant-like mammoths, and the now-extinct camels and bisons.

The search began in 1973 for Storck. Until then, only about 50 fluted spearheads had been found in Ontario. And it was only a chance discovery.

A farmer, while plowing, found pieces of ancient tools that led Storck to believe the early Paleo-Indian peoples, the Pleistocene hunters, had a site on a former island in an arm of Lake Algonquin, near Alliston, about 50 kilometres north of Toronto.

Since then, Storck and his archaelogical team have been combing the beaches of the lake at various sites in the area.

He believes these people moved into the area during the last retreat of the continental ice sheet.

He says they probably came north from New York and Michigan as the ice retreated, but maintains that Ontario's first people did not come across the Bering land bridge, because their artifacts have never been found in Siberia.

"It's curious that no human remains have ever been discovered. We know nothing biologically about them. We assume they're Indian because no one else except the Vikings in AD 1000, have ever lived here."

His team's work has led him to conclude they lived in bands of a related family, about 30 to 50 individuals, and their main weapon, a spear, had a "very distinctive spearhead, a fluted head made of chert."

"Then we would have some charcoal which would tell us the age and type of wood and, perhaps, some animal bone, to tell us exactly what they hunted and the timing of the site, what season it was."

gardening

jack beastall

When we recall the winter weather conditions high on the side of a mountain and the beautiful alpine plants that can survive, it is natural to feel they would do much better in a garden at sea level.

As many beginners with alpine plants have discovered this reasoning is not valid.

On the mountainside the plants are covered with snow during the period of lowest temperatures. Under snow which is not disturbed the temperature remains at a steady zero degrees Celsius.

In the sea-level gardens of Victoria there is no snow protection for the plants from November until June as there is on the mountain. Instead there is considerable rain with temperatures mild enough to maintain steady growth, and no protection from night frosts or bright sunshine on cold winter days.

These conditions, especially the frequent heavy rains, are not liked by alpine plants, and to grow them successfully requires a little ingenuity on the part of the gardener.

The clever alpinist will use vertical cracks in a natural rock outcrop for planting where enough protruding rock overhead keeps the plants reasonably dry over winter. Others arrange a piece of glass as a roof over the plants, the glass held in place by four wires and tilted slightly to shed the water beyond the roots.

At one time the wires that support these glass shelters were seen in most garden supply stores, but today the grower of alpine plants has to find someone to make them or do a little wirebending in the basement workshop.

There are four wires needed, shaped like the letter "F" to hold each sheet of glass. Heavy wire is used, as heavy as it is possible to bend in a vise.

The upright portion is long enough to go well into the soil and support the sheet of glass about three to four inches above the plant foliage.

The lower horizontal projection supports the sheet of glass and the top projection extends over the glass to hold it firm and prevent movement in strong winds. One wire support is placed at each corner of the glass.

The glass can be any size sufficient to cover the plant, but more supports will be needed if the sheets are to cover several plants in one area.

Usually the standard sixteen-inch square greenhouse glass is used. This is a little heavier than window glass and not so likely to break when being installed or walked over by the cat.

With these rain-shedding covers in place it is much easier to provide protection from the occasional winter cold spells experienced locally which follow a rainy period without enough snow to cover the plants.

A piece of sacking, doubled if necessary, can be draped over the glass to retain warmth and keep out cold wind, but the sacking must be removed as temperatures return to winter normal.

It takes a little time to make two or three dozen wire holders but if they are carefully stored with the glass over summer they are ready to use for many years before replacements will be needed, and the time is more than repaid when we succeed in growing these desirable rain-shy alpine plants.

Bad Billy blast

BURNABY (CP) — Bad Billy, a teaching aid for aspiring electricians, is causing sparks to fly between a parent and a high school teacher here.

Shirley Peters says Billy has no place in the Grade 8 classroom taught by Oliver Dailey. The Burnaby school board chairman agrees.

In a written complaint to Burnaby school board, Mrs. Peters says the sentence implies tacit acceptance of the idea of rape.

The ditty is a memory aid used for at least 30 years to help students remember the international color code for resistors. The first letter of each word corresponds to 10 color bands ranging from black to white.

Big event takes patience

VANCOUVER (CP) — Officials of the Vancouver Public Aquarium have been hoping for the past five years to have a whale born in captivity, but there are problems.

Hopes of a blessed event were raised after Hyak, the male in the pool, reached maturity in 1974. But although he and Skana have been getting together for three years now, there is no sign of pregnancy.

One difficulty is that Skana, age about 17, and fully-grown at six metres long and four tons in weight, is a bossy matriarch.

"Skana is a very dominating female," said Michaelis. "If there is any sexual activity, she initiates it."

Hyak, the same size as Skana, has the potential to grow to eight metres and weight of 10 tons in the next five years.

"I think he's waiting to get bigger so that he can force himself on her," said Michaelis.

Thais beef border against Viet moves

BANGKOK (AP) — The Thai command said today that more reinforcements have been sent to the Thai-Cambodian border to ward off any attack by Vietnamese soldiers who are reported intensifying their operations in western Cambodia. The number of reinforcements was not given.

A command spokesman said the Vietnamese struck north of Highway 5 this week against forces of ousted premier Pol Pot as well as anti-Communist Free Khmer troops.

More than 500,000 Cambodian refugees are clustered at the Thai-Cambodian border in that area and the Thais believe a major Vietnamese drive would send them into Thailand.

The Bangkok Post quotes Thai intelligence sources as saying Soviet-built jet fighters, helicopters, anti-aircraft guns and other heavy weapons have been moved closer to the Thai frontier to back a major Vietnamese drive.

The sources quoted by the newspaper predicted a "powerful offensive" will get under way between Dec. 15 and Dec. 25, the first anniversary of Vietnam's invasion of Cambodia that ousted Pol Pot and replaced him with a pro-Hanoi Communist Cambodian, Heng Samrin.

The article says Soviet transport aircraft have overflown Thai airspace about 80 times every month since September to supply the Vietnamese with military equipment.

Some say the Vietnamese will attempt to root out Pol Pot's guerrillas and the Free Khmer by using small units moving slowly and methodically.

Other analysts anticipate a major, multi-division drive that will roll toward the Thai frontier and perhaps result in hot pursuit of the fleeing guerrillas or a deliberate Vietnamese incursion.

Thailand and some Western states have been attempting to have a "safe-haven" zone established along the Thai-Cambodian border to protect the refugees there from the fighting.

Diplomatic sources in Bangkok say the Vietnamese, approached on this concept, have replied that any such zone would have to be on Thai territory and not inside Cambodia.

Thai and international aid workers are attempting to evacuate the huge border encampments as fast as possible but resistance by the Free Khmer leaders has hampered the evacuations.

The Thai government cut off food and water to one of the camps five days ago in an attempt to force the guerrilla leaders to allow their civilian followers to leave.

Medical personnel also have been barred from entering the guerrillas' camp at Non Mark Moon, which is shelter for more than 250,000 Cambodians. At least three a day are reported to have died since the blockade began.

TOKYO (UPI) — An experimental magnetic train reached a speed of 500 km/h in a test run today, breaking its own previous world record, its developers said.

The magnet-propelled vehicle, built by Japan National Railways engineers, achieved the new record during six runs on a 7-kilometer stretch in Miyazaki province on the southern main island of Kyushu, officials said.

The previous speed record was 451 km/h set by the same linear-motor vehicle, which moves on a cushion of air over the rails.

Stanfield meets pope

VATICAN CITY (Reuter) — Robert Stanfield, Canada's roving envoy, conferred privately today with Pope John Paul.

No information about the meeting was released.

Stanfield originally set out to gauge reaction to Canada's abortive plan to move its embassy in Israel to Jerusalem from Tel Aviv. His mandate from Prime Minister Joe Clark has been broadened to include consideration of what Canada should do to counter a campaign for an Arab boycott of Israel.

Stanfield will later visit Libya, Tunisia, Algeria and Morocco.

Battle with FBI won

NEWARK, N.J. (UPI) — The ordeal is finally over for Lori Paton who was at the center of a 6 ½-year legal battle that forced the FBI to alter its mail surveillance practices.

A U.S. District Court judge in Newark disclosed Wednesday he had signed a two-page order awarding her $1 in damages, finalizing a ruling that an FBI investigation into her activities was illegal.

"It's real nice to know it's all over," Miss Paton said.

Miss Paton, now 23 and a resident of Dallas, began her encounter with the FBI as a 16-year-old high school student. While researching a term paper, she wrote to the Socialist Workers Party — and became the target of an FBI investigation to determine if she was involved in subversive activities.

Miss Paton's letter to the SWP was flagged by a U.S. Postal Service "mail cover," a practice of recording addresses and other information on the cover of letters sent to organizations viewed as national security threats.

In 1973 after it became known she was under FBI investigation, the American Civil Liberties Union sued the government on her behalf.

The suit dragged on, through Miss Paton's college years at the University of Virginia in Charlottesville and two appearances before congressional committees investigating alleged FBI improprieties, before U.S. District Court Judge Lawrence Whipple declared the use of mail covers unconstitutional in November 1978.

In May, he ruled the FBI had violated Miss Paton's constitutional rights by conducting an illegal probe and opening a file on her. He finalized it Wednesday.

As a result of the legal action on her behalf, new surveillance regulations were drawn up limiting the use of mail covers to suspected cases of terrorism, sabotage and espionage.

Ottawa won't match Indochina sponsorships

OTTAWA (CP) — Four months after announcing it would match every private sponsorship of an Indochinese refugee, the federal government said Wednesday it is cancelling future participation in the program and redirecting its concerns to war-torn Cambodia.

Immigration Minister Ron Atkey said the government will shift the balance of the country's 50,000 quota of refugees to private sponsors and concentrate on providing food and other direct aid to ease famine in Cambodia.

Atkey's remarks in a Toronto interview came after a private meeting with church and other community leaders here.

A church spokesman said one reason given for the policy shift was that letters to politicians were running five-to-one against the refugee program.

Atkey said that was not discussed. Cancelling future government sponsorships would free money for direct aid to Cambodia. He gave no figure but the church spokesman said about $22 million was to go to Cambodia and Laos.

Meeting the 50,000 quota will depend on private sponsors picking up the slack from the government.

Atkey said the government will sponsor about 3,000 more refugees. It has already sponsored 12,000 while public sponsorships total 26,000.

The final tally, he said, is expected to be 15,000 government sponsorships and 35,000 private sponsorships.

Results of a Gallup poll made public just after Atkey's statement say 63.3 per cent of Canadians disagree with the federal policy of admitting 50,000 Indochinese refugees.

Atkey said the provinces support the program but feel any more than 50,000 "would not really be in our interest."

The government agreed in July to accept 50,000 refugees by the end of 1980 in response to a tide of public pressure to do something dramatic to help Vietnamese fleeing their country in boats.

The church leaders, representing institutions which have arranged umbrella sponsorship agreements with the government to cut red tape for parishioners who wanted to sponsor refugees, were flown in from across the country at government expense.

Under the program, groups of five or more private individuals pledge to be financially and morally responsible for a refugee for at least one year, by which time the refugee is expected to have a job and to be accustomed to his or her new circumstances.

Wednesday's decision created confusion as Atkey cancelled a scheduled news conference and did not say what he was planning until after church spokesmen leaked what they were told at the meeting.

Atkey and External Affairs Minister Flora MacDonald, who also attended the meeting, had scheduled a news conference to follow the meeting, but the conference was cancelled with the explanation that Atkey had to attend a funeral.

An Atkey aide said the conference had been called to give a unimportant progress report on the refugee plan and was expendable.

After the church leaders released details of the meeting, Atkey's aide, Dan Doctor, denied that the government was cancelling its sponsorships. The government is reducing its sponsorships to an extent yet to be decided by cabinet and will be announced by Atkey within two days, he said.

TORONTO (CP) — A Gallup poll commissioned by the National Citizens' Coalition says 63.6 per cent of Canadians disagree with the federal government policy of admitting 50,000 Indochinese refugees to Canada.

The poll, published today in a Toronto newspaper, is the latest salvo in a running battle over the refugees between federal Immigration Minister Ron Atkey and the coalition, which says "Canada lacks a well thought out, long-term policy on immigration."

The coalition, in previous advertisements, has said the 50,000 refugees would each sponsor about 15 relatives which could lead to "at least 750,000 people in the not too distant future."

Atkey had said the advertisement "smacked of racism."

However, on Wednesday Atkey said the federal government will reduce its planned sponsorship of Indochinese refugees.

The statement in a Toronto interview marked a shift in policy under which the government said it would match every private sponsorship with a government sponsorship.

Unravel forces, many plead

HALIFAX (CP) — An old issue for which feelings sometimes still run high got a new airing Wednesday as the federal task force reconsidering Canadian Forces unification opened the first in its series of public hearings.

Most of the presentations from retired officers, their associations and the Halifax Board of Trade as the only civilian group to give a representation, asked that the navy, army and air force revert to separate uniforms and identities.

In 1966, this largely-military city was a centre of the storm that erupted when former defence minister Paul Hellyer merged the three branches into a single green-uniformed service.

The navy commander here at the time, Rear Admiral William Landymore, denounced unification so bitterly that he was fired. On the way out he upheld his stand as "the most important duty it has been my privilege to discharge" and predicted that unification would weaken Canada's defences, crush morale and spark an exodus of servicemen.

Various groups attested Wednesday that Landymore's predictions have indeed come to pass.

The officers' groups cited pride of service as a fundamental rule and questioned whether the unified forces could succeed in a war situation.

The local Micmac Wing of the RCAF Association asked that the air branch be once again named the Royal Canadian Air Force and that the air force blue, navy blue [illegible] khaki uniforms [illegible] restored.

The Nova Scotia Naval Officers Association asked that Canada's two large naval bases — Stadacona in Halifax and Naden in Esquimalt, be recommissioned as HMCS Stadacona and HMCS Naden and once again be administrated along the lines of a ship.

Kitimat oil plan resurrected

VANCOUVER (CP) — The Kitimat oil port proposal, rejected by the B.C. and federal governments as environmentally dangerous, has been revived by a new company backed by a prominent British Columbia business executive.

J. V. Clyne, former chairman of MacMillan Bloedel, is one of the principals in Northern Pipeline Ltd., along with George Wilkinson, who worked on the original Kitimat project for Ashland Oil of Kentucky.

As well, Leslie Peterson and Ray Williston, former attorney-general and forests minister respectively in the Social Credit government of W. A. C. Bennett, have played an active part. Peterson's law firm has been engaged to handle legal matters and Williston "has done nothing but help," Wilkinson said.

He would not reveal who the new chairman of the board of directors will be other than to say he is a prominent Vancouver businessman.

Northern, which won't be registered as a B.C. company until next week, already has been lobbying for support for its application.

However, a spokesman for the National Energy Board said in Ottawa that no one has heard of the new proposal and he doubted the board would hear the application before U.S. President Carter is due to submit his pipeline recommendations to Congress late next month.

The new backers still plan to push the proposal and hope to persuade the B.C. government that Kitimat is a good location.

Clyne said Williston's research indicates Kitimat is environmentally preferable to Port Angeles, a leading candidate for a port for Alaskan crude.

"I think if we're going to have an oil spill anywhere at all on the B.C. coast, then it would be better to have it at Kitimat, where it can be contained," he said.

(The freighter Star Opal is in drydock in Victoria after ripping out her bottom in Laredo channel south of Kitimat Nov. 6. Environmentalists claim the approach to Kitimat is dangerous due to rocks and shoals, and the lack of maneouvring space in the channels).

Clyne said he has had no contact with B.C. government officials on the proposal, but said there is a chance they will back it if Carter leaves the door open.

At present, three companies are proposing to move the Alaskan oil: Northern Tier, from Port Angeles through an all-U.S. line; Trans Mountain, from Low Point, Wash., to Edmonton and on to Chicago, and Foothills, from Fairbanks along the Alaska Highway to Edmonton and beyond.

Jim Fulton (NDP-Skeena) described the Kitimat proposal as "a distant, distant third" in relation to the Trans Mountain and Foothills' proposals.

Considering the lack of support for the original proposal by the former Liberal government and the present Conservative administration, it's unlikely Northern Pipeline Ltd.'s proposal can expect support.

Fulton was also concerned about tankers having to navigate the "relatively shallow" waters off the Queen Charlottes.

Oil panic feared

TORONTO (CP) — Canadian officials of major oil companies say that while they believe oil shortages in Eastern Canada are imminent, they are afraid of causing panic among consumers.

To cope with the low supplies, refiners have quietly started to ration gasoline to private-brand service stations. Refinery tanks in the region are so low the companies are having trouble handling their existing contracts.

Prime Minister Joe Clark told the Commons Wednesday Canada could have oil shortages this winter because of a cutoff of Iranian oil.

The halt in Iranian oil sales to Gulf Canada Ltd., because it is a subsidiary of a U.S. firm, means their refinery at Point Tupper, N.S., will run out of oil in February or early March unless alternate supplies are found.

Clark told the House of Commons that Gulf hoped to find alternate supplies and he did not expect reduced supplies from other companies. But he added that the government was seeking other supplies and was establishing the machinery for rationing.

"The National Energy Board has now, as a result of increased consumption in Canada and some other activities, come to the conclusion that there may be limited shortages this winter in Canada," Clark said.

Clark said a board to oversee possible rationing will be appointed by the end of next week. Legislation permitting the emergency supplies board was approved last winter.

Inset is dissident Ayatollah Shariat-Madari while Khomeini loyalists parade

Khomeini stand softer

Times News Services

As critics of his regime seized a provincial city, Ayatollah Khomeini softened his stand on the hostage issue and President Carter said he was "tightening the screws" on Iran.

Tens of thousands of Iranian demonstrators seized the northwestern city of Tabriz today, posing a major domestic challenge to Khomeini in a move that could jeopardize the early release of the hostages in Tehran.

Dissident supporters of moderate religious leader Ayatollah Kazem Shariat-Madari first captured the radio and television stations in Tabriz, then fanned through the city of 2 million near the Turkish border. By nightfall it was effectively in their hands.

In radio broadcasts, the demonstrators said they had fired the province's governor, urged other towns to mobilize for revolution and claimed the backing of local police and army units.

The demonstrators were demanding changes in an Islamic constitution that would give Khomeini absolute power in Iran for life.

In Tehran, Khomeini today was quoted as saying the UN Security Council's call for a negotiated settlement of the U.S.-Iranian crisis is "a step forward."

Pars news agency said that Foreign Minister Sadegh Ghotbzadeh met Khomeini in the holy city of Qom and they "noticed that this is not a resolution condemning us."

While the two leaders were talking, supporters of Khomeini and the religious leader of the country's Turkish minority clashed in the holy city of Qom for the second straight day over the Islamic constitution that makes Khomeini supreme ruler for life, residents reported.

In Washington, President Carter said Wednesday night he would "turn the screws a little tighter" on Iran every few days to obtain the release of the hostages.

An apparent new turn of the screw is the administration's decision to dispatch key officials around the world in an effort to gain cooperation with U.S. moves aimed at freezing Iranian government assets deposited outside Iran.

The president stressed economic and diplomatic steps to win the freedom of the 50 hostages, although the administration has said it will not give up a military option.

In other developments:

— U.S. National Security Adviser Zbigniew Brzezinski said the student followers of Khomeini have been infiltrated by radical leftists.

— Former Iranian prime minister Shapur Bakhtiar was quoted today in Spain as saying he is organizing a political and military opposition to take power when Khomeini's regime falls, as "The number of Khomeini's real faithful is decreasing."

Still at large

RICHMOND (CP) — A convicted murderer being returned to prison after an escape last month was on the loose again Wednesday after he bolted from a plane at Vancouver International Airport.

A police spokesman said Anthony Gerein, 27, was being returned from California and was in the custody of United States immigration officials when the plane landed here.

Bennett tight-lipped on research firings

By JAKE BANKY

Premier Bill Bennett refused today to comment on the mass firing of the Social Credit caucus research staff.

"I don't make comments on caucus business," he said.

Asked if he, as a caucus member, concurred in the decision, Bennett replied, "All caucus decisions are kept within caucus."

Bennett referred reporters to a statement by caucus chairman Jack Kempf when asked if the firings stemmed from the dirty tricks affair.

"I've seen Mr. Kempf's statement and he said no," Bennett said.

Meanwhile, at least two former Socred caucus researchers intend to sue the Socreds for wrongful dismissal.

Vancouver lawyer Robert Gardner, representing Ellen Mackay and Jack Kelly, said Wednesday it is no longer a question of whether they'll sue, but when.

Kelly resigned as chief caucus researcher Oct. 10, shortly after the storm broke over the dirty tricks affair. Mackay is one of the four research staff members who suddenly found themselves jobless Tuesday after receiving terse notes of dismissal from Kempf.

Gardner said the timing of a wrongful dismissal suit against caucus will depend on the continuing RCMP investigation into dirty tricks.

"We want to get the criminal things cleared up before we get into the civil side," he said.

Police investigating the lettergate affair are to talk to Kelly and Mackay this week.

Gardner intervened Nov. 9 to prevent his clients talking to police, demanding that the attorney-general first guarantee there was no political interference with the investigation.

That assurance was given but so far the police have not been permitted to interview Mackay or Kelly.

Now Gardner says: "We are planning to talk to the police and give them the whole thing."

The police inquiry into the possibility that Socred political dirty tricks may have included criminal acts has been under way since Oct. 17. So far there is no indication when a report can be expected.

He said Wednesday he has

Premier Bill Bennett said today there is nothing strange about the various bank accounts used for Socred party purposes not being under the control of party officials.

"There is nothing mysterious," he said. "Political parties raise funds in a number of ways."

U-deposits threat to farming?

VANCOUVER (CP) — Farming near surface uranium deposits in the Okanagan Valley, pinpointed for the first time Wednesday, might be hazardous, Dr. David Bates, chairman of the royal commission into uranium mining, said Wednesday.

The 46 deposits, located between Oliver and Kelowna and near Kamloops, are on Crown rangeland, agricultural reserve land and within municipal areas. Many are in areas which supply water for domestic use, cattle, irrigation and recreation.

Sixteen sites are within five kilometres of Oliver, another 16 within Summerland, eight within ten kilometres of Penticton.

The deposits are not radioactive but since uranium is a heavy metal associated with lead and thorium, toxicity problems might arise.

"It is possible that using fertilizers on this particular land might have the effect of mobilizing uranium," Dr. Bates said.

The commission made public a report by Vancouver geological consultants detailing the locations.

Dr. Bates said the surface uranium concentrations, which do not have a level of radioactivity common in other uranium deposits, have been discovered by geochemical means.

"The concentrations are called 'young' because they have not yet reached the radioactive stage," he said.

B.C. lawyers can advertise

VANCOUVER (CP) — The B.C. Law Society has ended a contentious issue by agreeing to allow fee advertising by lawyers.

Deputy secretary Dennis Olmstead said a bulletin will go out to society members saying that lawyers can advertise fees, but the mechanics of how this is to be done have not been determined.

The resolution climaxed two days of discussion in which benchers — the society's executive body — voted to amend their stand on advertising by a vote of nine to six.

The law society's previous prohibition on advertising resulted in disciplinary action against two lawyers, Don Jabour and Jack James, and action by Jabour against the law society under the Combines Investigation Act.

"I think at first there will be a number of ads placed in newspapers, the newspapers will make a bit of money, and then, after the initial excitement over it dies down, legal ads will become something like a personnel file and become relegated to the back of the newspaper in the classifieds," Harry Rankin, law society treasurer, said.

Stock brokers bracing for BCRIC run

By AL FORREST

Victoria brokerage houses are braced for panic selling of BCRIC shares.

Not that there's anything fundamentally wrong with the corporation.

It's just simple arithmetic.

Present commission for selling five shares is about $1.25. This will go to $10 on Feb. 1, Vancouver Stock Exchange president Robert Scott said today.

The change will have a dramatic effect on small holdings. Anyone owning 100 shares can breathe easy because they will be above the minimum rate level and their commissions will not change.

The hundreds of thousands still holding five-share lots, however, face this situation. If BCRIC is selling at $7 (it's just under) the selling price before February is $35 minus $1.25 commission for a net return of $33.75.

To get a net return of $33.75 the price would have to jump $2 a share to just under $9.

Scott has mixed feelings about the panic sale that is just beginning to pick up steam in the rush for extra Christmas cash.

From the stock exchange point of view, he said, he is pleased the five-share holdings are being consolidated, expecially into board lots of 100. It will make it easier for the VSE to handle the transactions.

But from a personal point of view, he said, he would rather see people rushing in to buy, not sell.

The buying commission is also low right now and this is an ideal time to build up to a board lot before the commission rate increases.

"I know people will be selling because they need a little extra Christmas cash and they want to take advantage of the special commission rate. But BCRIC is an excellent buy."

The recent dip has been in response to a downtrend in lumber prices but BCRIC has other things going for it that more than counteract this temporary weakness, Evans said.

"Pulp is a major part of BCRIC holdings and the price is strong. I understand there could be a $25-a-ton price increase in January. Newsprint is also in demand."

Evans said BCRIC also has $506 million sitting in the bank earning interest at about 14 per cent.

"That is significant income for any company. And they may use that money at any time to buy into some interesting resource proposition."

Evans said an American-owned (Cyrpus Anvil) lead-zinc-silver mine near Williston Lake in northeastern B.C. is a possible buy along with various natural gas projects.

Evans said the lumber price weakness is only temporary.

Producer prices rise in U.S.

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Propelled by the sharpest advance in food costs since 1974, producer prices jumped 1.3 percent in November, the Labor Department reported today.

Energy prices, a main contributor to the surging U.S. inflation rate this year, tapered off last month by rising at the slowest rate since February.

But food prices, which registered a small decline in October, shot upward by 2.6 percent — the biggest jump since November 1974, the Labor Department said.
